What Is High Standing? Ponies Will Not Do It Death, Either Way A Life for $2.40

By ARTHUR BRISBANE

Congressman Adolph J. Sabath, head of the committee investigating the Amoskeag textile mills in New England, reveals "financial sabotage" alleged to have cost innocent investors forty million dollars. It is declared that nothing was considered by the Amoskeag management but the welfare, and financial protection of a few "insiders."

But Congressman Sabath says: "I do not want to take action today, because not many MEN OF HIGH STANDING are involved."

What is "high standing"? Is men that wreck a great industrial concern for their own profit, and cause innocent investors to lose forty million dollars are persons of "high standing," how would you describe "low standing"?

Do the thousands of workmen that have lost work and wages, the small fry investors that lost $40,000,000, supply the "low standing" element?

Polo players from the Argentine who recently taught our American players something about riding and hitting a little wooden ball, seem to be good business men as well as good polo players. First, they beat the Americans, then they sold them 48 polo ponies for $167,000, or an average of $3472 each. One young man paid $14,500 for a pony, one proud father paid $12,700 for a pony for his son, although they know that buying the best Argentine ponies will not make our team beat the Argentines.

James Gordon Bennett, annoyed by Joseph Pulitzer's competition, reduced the price of his New York Herald and Joseph Pulitzer wrote this editorial: "Changing your price will not do any good. You must change your newspaper."

The Madrid government announced swift, certain victory at first, but now seem less confident. Officers are ordered to "kill every one of their men who show cowardice, or refuse to charge the enemy." Raw recruits are warned that unless they risk death, as ordered, they will find sure death from the bullets of their own officers.

The worst Spanish war news announces the destruction of many of the noblest works of art, including El Greco's magnificent painting of the "Burial of Count Orgaz."

Spanish mothers will easily reduce the fighters on both sides, but the work of no great an artist can never be replaced. The painting showed the rich pious Count of Orgaz, who supplied money to make over 6 heathen Mohammedan mosque into the Toledo Christian Church of Santo Tome. The pious nobleman is seen with St. Augustine and St. Stephen carrying him to heaven. The real name of El Greco, so called, because he was a Greek, was Domenico Theotocopuli.

Yankee Stadium, N. Y., Oct. 5 — The New York Giants provided one of baseball's biggest upsets here today by defeating the Yankees and making the World's Series count now 3 to 2 in favor of the McCarthy group as a disappointing crowd of 35,000 looked on.

Charley Ruffing started on the mound for the Yankees and was opposed by Hal Schumacher.

The Giants opened an early assault on Ruffing in the first inning but settled their runs. Moore started the trouble with a double and Bartell duplicated. Ruffing then fanned Terry and forced Ott to roll out but Ripple, Mancuso and Whitehead singled in a row and the first two runs manufactured three outs.

The Yankees cut down the Giants' margin to two runs in the second when Selkirk hit his second home run of the series with the bases empty. Gehrig had singled to open the inning and then went out, Dickey to short, when the ball went through Ott's legs. Lost tried to score when Dickey grounded to Schumacher but Terry threw him out completing a double play.

DIMAGGIO, GEHRIG FAN

It appeared as though the Yanks would blow up the game in the third, but Schumacher, who got himself into trouble, ended up with one of the greatest hurling feats in series history. Hal walked Lazzeri and Ruffing, and followed with a wild pitch. Bartell then made a bad throw on Crosetti's roller and Lazzeri scored, with Crosetti reaching Rolfe safely on the play at the bases.

With the sacks loaded and nobody out, Schumacher then fanned DiMaggio and Gehrig and watched Dickey fly out to Ott.

After scoreless fifth and sixth innings, the Giants found Ruffing for another run. Ott opened the frame with a single. Ripple walked and Ott was advanced on Mancuso's sacrifice. Ott came home when Crosetti fumbled Whitehead's grounder, but that ended the scoring, as Ruffing settled down to fan Jackson and Schumacher.

A costly error by Jackson in the last of the sixth erased the two-run lead enjoyed by the Giants and deadlocked the score. After Gehrig and Dickey had gone out, Selkirk singled. Powell hit to Jackson for what looked like an easy out but the Giants' third baseman threw wildly over Terry's head and Selkirk scored while Powell continued on to third. Powell also scored when Lazzeri followed with a single. Roy Johnson was then sent up to pinch hit for Ruffing and fanned.

MALONE RELIEF HURLER

Manager Joe McCarthy sent the Yankees National League castoff, Pat Malone, to the hill to open the seventh.

GEORGE SELKIRK

Italian Lira Devaluated By Duce

Rome, Oct. 5 (INS)—Devaluation of the Italian lira to 5.3 cents was suddenly announced today by Premier Mussolini.

Following directly in the footsteps of France, Italy decided at a meeting of the cabinet this morning not only to cut the lira from the level of 7.39 cents to which it had been sinking for more than a week, but also slash tariffs.

WORTH 19 TO DOLLAR

Il Duce announced to a world that had not expected devaluation so soon that the lira henceforth would be worth 19 to the dollar and 92 to the British pound, as compared to about 21 French francs to the dollar.

Devaluation will be accomplished by devaluing the gold content of the Italian monetary unit from 7.91 grammes per hundred lire to 4.677.

Italy's raising on tariffs came for the same reason as France's decision to lower customs duties by 15 to 20 per cent—the great bulk of the public fears that a decrease in the buying power of the lira will result in a corresponding boost in the cost of living.

REDUCE DUTIES

Wholesale reductions in duties on "primary necessities" were therefore announced, including foodstuffs and coal.

Using his dictatorial power, Mussolini also announced that prices on certain articles will be stabilized at their present levels—an attempt that was frustrated in France by a rebellious Senate.

WONDERLAND REVERE

Deport the Alien Reds! Rescind the Recognition of Soviet Russia!

The fact that Communism—nurtured by Soviet Russia—is seeking to destroy the free institutions of America is not to be denied.

Neither is the shameful fact to be denied that COMMUNISTS are supporting Franklin D. Roosevelt for re-election in 1936 IN ORDER TO BUILD A REVOLUTIONARY "PEOPLES' FRONT" IN 1940.

Mr. Roosevelt has said that he repudiates this support. But what has he done to prove that he repudiates it? Russian Communism in America can be officially repudiated only by two courses of executive action:

1—By immediately deporting all alien Communists, as the law requires; and

2—By immediately rescinding the recognition of Soviet Russia.

'BEAT LANDON AT ANY COST,' BROWDER TELLS REDS HERE

Renewal of the Red drive against Governor Alfred M. Landon was seen here today following the address of Earl Browder, Communist presidential candidate, at Boston Arena, in which he called for the defeat of Landon and Knox in the coming election "at all costs."

Browder, starting a four-day New England campaign, was bitter against Republicans and Democrats, as well as the Union party fostered by Father Coughlin, but concentrated his fire on the candidacy of Landon and Knox.

He charged that the "forces of reaction were grouped about Landon and Knox" and that Republican leaders were grabbing as much as possible in order to get votes.

President Roosevelt, he asserted, was unsatisfactory to everyone while Father Coughlin came in for bitter criticism for his attacks, described as more vitriolic than any a Communist would dare to make. Some 2000 party members from five New England states were present as Browder asserted the Communist party was not so much concerned with the coming election as with building up a strong organization for 1940 or 1944.

Waiting for a train to take him back to Portland, Joseph Arsanzio, a needle worker who brought his wife and four children to see the presidential candidate, was frankly baffled.

"All the pamphlets I have bought on Communism never explained anything. They always said that everything in this country is wrong except the people's front. But I became a Communist because the party is always talking about raising wages in factories.

Mr. Browder told us that the Communist party is against war, against violence, against dictatorship. But he spent an hour yelling for class war, praising Russia, where violence and dictatorship keeps the bosses in power, and making fun of the people who run this country."

Arsanzio, with several others from Portland and vicinity, were quite confused by Browder's invective against "Wall Street puppets," the "reactionary tories" and the "industrial royalists." All told they had contributed $36 for thunderous oratory, a thumping brass band, a fancy-dressed cheering squad of young Communists, and a Negro choral society that sang "I want to go to Heaven and Sit Down."

With dynamic Richard B. Moore, manager of the Massachusetts campaign, at the speakers' rostrum exhorting the audience, the campaign committee collected $1015, most of it from local party members.

Crossley Poll Shows

Landon Electoral Vote May Hit 273

For the first time in a presidential election, trends in the campaign are being analyzed day by day by a certified public opinion organization with the scientific exactitude of an economist charting financial index.

A. M. Crossley, director of the Crossley National Poll for the Boston Evening American, supplements his weekly summaries of the standings of the candidates with daily interpretative reports and commentaries on trends that are of great significance in determining what the result will be. This is one of the series.

By A. M. CROSSLEY
Director of the Crossley National Poll
(Copyright, 1936, King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

New York, Oct. 5—Because it has been referred to as a "political miracle" that Landon, with considerably fewer electoral votes definitely "in the bag" at present than the President with his Solid South following, should have a chance to carry enough of the doubtful States to be elected, I have today analyzed not only the latest findings of the Crossley Poll, but have collated those figures with the other reliable nation-wide polls as well, in order to determine precisely how much of a "miracle" Landon's election would be.

My judgment is this: It is entirely possible, and indeed as the polls stand at present, probable or likely, that Landon, by election time will receive 273 electoral votes, or enough to win by a majority of seven; and it is by no means improbable that he will get 311 of the 531 electoral votes.

The fundamental fact to be realized is that each of the doubtful states is a separate unit in the voting.

So let us look at ten states with 184 electoral votes, leaving out of the election, and see what the polls show as to Landon's chances in each.

In Illinois the Crossley Poll gives Landon a slight advantage. Other polls give him greater advantage.

Indiana shows a Landon advantage. In Michigan, there is a Roosevelt edge, but the indications are that a shift of a relatively few thousand votes will capture the State. The Detroit vote is crucial in this election. Landon could carry this state.

In Minnesota, formerly considered safe for Roosevelt, the death of Floyd Olson has had its effect and some polls put this in the Landon column now. Our own shows a one-point Roosevelt lead, with Landon coming up. His chances appear good.

With Nebraska we run into difficulties. Our own poll shows Landon trailing by three per cent; other polls show him leading. The Roosevelt percentages in the Crossley Polls have been fairly constant and, if the past is a guide, it cannot be conceded to Landon.

New Jersey, New York, Ohio, Pennsylvania and North Dakota present much the same picture as the five states considered above—slightly favoring Landon.

(Mr. Crossley continues his analysis of the campaign tomorrow in the Boston Evening American.)

CHECK TO REDS TOLD BY DUBINSKY

ADMITS AID TO SPANISH FRONT

(Special to American Newspapers, Inc)

New York, Oct. 5—While admitting that the Furriers' Joint Council of New York had given him a $5000 check irrespective "contribution for defense of Spanish People's Front," David Dubinsky, a Democratic presidential elector in this State, denied that the funds were used for war-making.

(Editor's note—A facsimile of the furriers' check was published in yesterday's Boston Sunday Advertiser.)

Dubinsky, president of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union, was principal speaker at the first of a series of five meetings of the American Labor party to be held in the Brooklyn Academy of Music. About 1000 persons attended.

There was no mention of the furriers' check in Dubinsky's prepared address, distributed to newspapers before publication of the reproduction. But the speaker, departing from his prepared speech, said:

"If the innocent stub on a check is evidence, then let me show this as evidence in reply.

"Here is a receipt reading:

"'National Council of Labor, representing the trades union congress, the labor party, and the parliamentary labor party. Dated August 26. Received of the International Ladies' Garment Workers of America, the sum of 1987 pounds, 1 shilling, 8 pence, being a contribution to the international solidarity fund to be utilize1 for the relief of Spanish workers and their dependents. With thanks, (Signed) Walter Citrine.'

MONEY NOT NEEDED

"Upon decision of the meeting at Manhattan Opera House on August 6 our union sent a check for $5000 to aid the heroic Spanish fighters who are sacrificing their lives in the struggle against the Fascist murderers, who seek, with the aid of Hitler and Mussolini, to throttle the Spanish republic and establish a Fascist regime."

The speaker specifically insisted that Sir Walter Citrine, head of the British trade union movement and president of the International Federation of Trade Unions, had declared the funds were meant for buying serum, hospital supplies, food and tobacco. Dubinsky went on:

"Let me point out that the Spanish government does not need money. It has something like $740,000,000 in gold in its treasury, but the Red Cross in Spain, as in any other country, makes appeals for funds regardless of the wealth of the country."

Despite the inscription on the furriers' check, and the item in the furriers' newspaper, Dubinsky declared the funds were being collected for "labor's Red Cross for the Spanish worker victims of the civil war.

DENIES HE'S RED

Denying he was a Communist, Dubinsky said:

"I think it's a badge of honor when the term is put on a Communist. That's the tories' name for a progressive labor leader who strives for better conditions for the working man."

He condemned former Governor Smith for supporting Governor Landon for the presidency, asserting:

"Smith, too, was a victim of false issues. In 1928 Hoover called him a Socialist."

In his prepared address, Dubinsky, whose election as a Roosevelt presidential elector has been protested by many Democrats, also assailed Republican Chairman John D. M. Hamilton, one of his accusers.

SCORES HAMILTON

He asserted that Hamilton "must know that his charge is a deliberate falsehood, made with intent to deceive. He knows that I am no advocate of Communism, but, on the contrary, have been an open opponent of Communism for many years."

Dubinsky declared that Hamilton should accuse former President Hoover of being a Communist, because in 1919-1920 he furnished relief to the Communists of Russia.

The speaker charged that Hamilton had shown complete sympathy for the Fascist rebels making war on the Spanish Republic."

Another speaker, City Chamberlain Berle, carried this further, charging that Hamilton had aligned the Republican party on the side of the Spanish Fascists, and that this action tended "to endanger the neutral position of this country."

Louis Waldman, right-wing Socialist and leader in the American Labor Party, which is seeking the re-election of President Roosevelt and Governor Lehman, was chairman of the meeting.

HAIGIS MAKES 8 SPEECHES DURING DAY

By L. CONANT, JR.

State and National Republican candidates joined forces in Massachusetts today as thousands made ready to greet Col. Frank Knox, G. O. P. vice-presidential nominee, on his victory swing through the western part of the state.

Headed by Henry Cabot Lodge, Jr., party nominee for senator, and John W. Haigis, gubernatorial candidate, all members of the state ticket will be present at the rally in Symphony Hall tonight.

Earlier in the day, Col. Knox's itinerary calls for stops in New Bedford and Fall River.

EIGHT MEETINGS

Busiest man in the state today was Haigis as he prepared to fill a schedule of eight meetings in as many communities.

Preceding the Knox rally, the Bay State's "Fighting Governor" will speak at state ticket rallies in Belmont, Watertown and Newtonville.

Capacity houses are anticipated and parades will be part of the evening's activities.

Haigis will also be the principal speaker at an evening meeting of the Women's Republican Club of Cambridge in the Cantabrigia Club House.

In a weak-end rally, Haigis told his audience of his record on social measures.

"In 1923," he said, "when I was in the Senate I voted in favor of establishing a commission, on the recommendation of Governor Fox, for the study of old age pensions and social security.

"As a result of that study there was finally enacted the present old age assistance act."

TESTIMONIAL DINNER

Also on Haigis' schedule for tonight is a testimonial dinner to be tendered him by the South End Republican Club at the Hotel Lenox.

Two important endorsements of the Republican cause were forthcoming from non-political organizations. These were the Boston Fruit and Vegetable Buyers' Association and the Associated Independent Distributors.

Both groups declared that industry and small business had been severely injured as a result of the Roosevelt policies.

Further support from the students of the commonwealth was recorded when the newly organized Young Republican Club of Simmons College predicted that 95 per cent of the students at Simmons would vote for Landon at the November election.

The vital importance of registration was stressed by the Republican workers by state committee officials who demonstrated that in the last three off-year elections those not voting could have more than swung the balance of power and changed results.

A feature of the Knox rally in New Bedford will be the official greeting to be extended by the veteran Democratic mayor, Charles S. Ashley.

President Seeks To Win Michigan

Hyde Park, N. Y., Oct. 5 (INS)—President Roosevelt today decided to make a fighting effort to capture Michigan's electoral vote as a result of reports given to him by Frank Murphy, Democratic candidate for governor of that state.

Returning from his trip by train, the President will make speeches both in Grand Rapids and Detroit—both probably on October 15.

Neither the President nor Murphy are fooling themselves that it will be easy to take Michigan from Governor Landon. Father Coughlin's large following is represented by astute observers as the balance of power in the state, and if the Lemke slate gets on the ticket it will materially enhance Republican chances.

Topeka, Kas., Oct. 5—A nation-wide enthusiastic commendation from Jewish leaders of his stand against "racial prejudice" today convinced Governor Alfred M. Landon he had definitely halted one whispering campaign that is dogging him with being anti-Semitic.

The Republican nominee was inundated during the past few days with telegrams and letters from noted Jewish leaders, praising his outright denunciation of "racial prejudices and religious bigotries." They heartily approved his statement disclaiming "the support of any such organizations or groups" that sought to "exploit prejudice between groups of American citizens" and declaring he would defend any one denied the liberties guaranteed by the "bill of rights."

Some of the comments in the long statement from Jewish leaders, follow:

Lewis L. Strauss, New York banker and philanthropist:

"Your fine statement denouncing attempts to introduce bigotry into the campaign was well received here. It is in complete accord with your consistent attitude and public record, and should permanently refute the rumor mongering of those who have stooped to deliberate misrepresentation of your position and that of the party."

Jacob Asher, Boston attorney and charity director:

"Your message against racial prejudices and religious bigotry inspiring. Grateful that you have silenced this insidious propaganda."

Seething Political Pot Stirred

Still at Home,
Oct. 5, 1936.

Timmy,
Timmy's Tavern,
Boston, Mass.
Dear Timmy:

Timmy, I wish you would go through your bin of cole slaw in search of whatever it is that has put me on the blink. Maybe it is just too much slaw but the Doc says I am here for a couple of more days yet and I am sure it is something I ate.

Well, Timmy, pushing up blankets hasn't prevented me from getting the low down on a lot of things the boys will be interested to hear. My couriers are reporting every hour or so and you may find this bulletin under yesterday's bulletin under the picture of the bathing beauty.

The Senator

Johnny Craven, ex-representative from Ward 9, South End and Roxbury, who won the Democratic nomination for representative in the primaries, is withstanding a lot of pressure seeking to cause him to announce a belated withdrawal in favor of Dick Gleason's sister, Mrs. Mildred Harris, whom he defeated for the nomination. It is proposed that Mrs. Harris run on stickers. This is a strictly Democratic district.

The fight Joe Grossman is making to hold his executive council seat from the second district was not aided over the week-end when two of his Democratic opponent's primary contestants actively entered the fight for Charlie Fitzgerald. Thomas F. Galvin, who ran third to Fitzgerald, is reported to have taken over the treasurer's job for the Fitzgerald campaign and James Gillis, who ran fourth, has organized a Fitzgerald committee.

G. O. P.'s Worry

Maine Republicans are more than a little concerned over what they believe to be evidence that Governor Jim donated a flock of Pine Tree State billboards to furthering the interests of Governor Louis J. Brann in his unsuccessful campaign for the United States Senate, the concern of the Maine Republicans in this matter seems to me a lot like the Yankees worrying because they only got four hits off Freddy Fitzsimmons Saturday.

Timmy, I have it on the closest authority that Public Utilities Commissioner Richard (Dictaphone) Grant has had a slight falling out with Governor Jim's son, Leo, as an aftermath of that now famous drama, "The Night of September 29," Governor Jim's son, Leo, received a black eye or two—let us say two—in a merry go at John C. O'Day's Hotel Bellevue.

Despite Leo's purported close friendship for the person who climbed Commissioner Grant, the latter is reported ready and waiting—in his parked car on several recent nights—for a return engagement. What with the general depression in the professional cauliflower market, the lads are pooling their resources and I hope they see black eye to black eye in this matter.

While on the subject, it is apropos to state that the former football hero, Henry Gildea, is making a quiet search for the party who nudged him on the noggin with a beer bottle as he assisted Commissioner Grant to an upright position during the recent fracas.

Much investigation is underway for the purpose of determining why the combined Greenwood-O'Brien primary vote in Governor Jim's own Jamalcaway precinct came so close to equalling Governor Jim's total. Dirty work is suspected and Frank Kane was assigned the task of reconnoitering the crossroads.

A very humorous incident occurred when the returns were reaching Governor Jim on primary night. On such occasions he is always pestered by reporters and shotgun and one of this group was making himself particularly obnoxious.

With the first returns this party approached Governor Jim, gave him the Curley and Lodge totals and declaimed, "Governor, it's a walkaway." He repeated this on several subsequent reports but when the Lodge total began to roll he changed the theme song to, "Governor, it looks like a fight." Governor Jim swallowed this for 67 precincts when, perhaps a trifle wearied, he turned upon the stooge and said in the inimitable Curley manner: "It not only looks like a fight but it will certainly be one if you don't get away from me." Subsequent reports were delivered with out comment.

Well, Timmy, I am not one of those greatly concerned about the plans of the WPA workers to go on strike. I thought that was what it was all the time.

The Senator.

Democratic Chiefs Here Sidestep "Deal" Rally

"That is not a Democratic administration . . . Men of the opposite faith, because they put the stamp of approval upon the New Deal, receive the strength and power of the so-called Democratic administration . . . Why, even a Communist with wire whiskers and a stovepipe in his hands is welcome, so long as he signs on the dotted line."

—From Al Smith's New York address endorsing Landon for President.

Regular Democratic candidates in Massachusetts—with Al Smith's charge that the Roosevelt administration was no longer Democratic still ringing in their ears—were today sidestepping the first Roosevelt rally in Boston, scheduled for tonight at the Boston Arena by labor.

The star speakers announced for this meeting are Fiorella H. La Guardia, the Socialist-Republican mayor of New York; David Dubinsky, the Socialist chosen as a Roosevelt elector in New York, Sidney Hillman, former Socialist of New York, and Governor James M. Curley, Democratic nominee for the United States Senate.

But today, Governor Curley, as he left for a speaking tour and he did not plan to attend the meeting.

As a marked contrast to the great Democratic opening rally of four years ago when Al Smith was the magnet that drew a record crowd to the Boston Arena to hear a speech that was credited by Roosevelt managers with swinging the state into the Roosevelt column, and at which every Democratic leader of any note, this meeting will not be addressed by a single candidate on the Democratic state ticket.

Democratic leaders today were unanimous in pleading "previous engagements" when it was announced the chief speeches were to be made by Mayor LaGuardia, of whom Al Smith said, "If he's a Democrat, I'm a Chinaman with a haircut," and David Dubinsky, the radical labor leader, who contributed $5000 to the Spanish Reds' cause.

At the opening rally four years ago, the chief speakers were Smith, United States Senator David I. Walsh, United States Senator Marcus A. Coolidge, Governor Joseph B. Ely, James M. Curley, then mayor of Boston, Congressman John W. McCormack and other members of the Democratic congressional delegation, as well as every candidate for an important state office.

This year not one of the party leaders will be present at the opening rally, but Umberto Alosa, of the Garment Workers' union, and a Roosevelt leader, today said Mayor La Guardia would be here "unless some great emergency prevented," and Dubinsky and Hillman would surely be here.

HURLEY VISITS HOME TOWN OF RIVAL

By WILLIAM C. CONWAY

With hopes running high, the Democratic state ticket headed for western Massachusetts today for a three-day tour which will take the candidates into 12 key cities and towns including Greenfield, home of John W. Haigis, Republican gubernatorial nominee.

State Treasurer Charles F. Hurley, Democratic gubernatorial nominee was highly confident and optimistic as he started out today from his Cambridge home for the most important trip he will be called upon to make in his campaign for the chief executive post.

The three-day rally schedule arranged by the Democratic State Committee will carry State Treasurer Hurley into his Republican opponent's bailiwick. The political strength of John W. Haigis, G. O. P. gubernatorial nominee, in the western part of the state is really conceded by the Democrats.

However, State Treasurer Hurley's partisans pointed out that in his previous political battles the Democratic gubernatorial candidate has always polled an exceptionally large vote in that section of the state. In addition, Hurley partisans said, for the past six years, the State Treasurer has been a frequent visitor to western Massachusetts cities and towns.

CURLEY GOES WEST

Governor James M. Curley set the trek to the west today when he departed from Boston on the 8:30 a.m. train for Pittsfield. First stop in Governor Curley's itinerary will be a luncheon rally in front of the Pittsfield plant of the General Electric Company.

The state ticket candidates will start the three-day swing tonight at a rally in Williamstown High school hall. Before the night is over, all candidates will have appeared at rallies in North Adams, Adams, Dalton and Pittsfield.

Traveling independently of the state ticket candidates will be James Roosevelt, eldest son of the President, who is conducting a tour throughout the state. Roosevelt will team up with the state ticket candidates at Pittsfield, however, for the rallies which have been scheduled by the state committee.

LEADERS JUBILANT

Democratic party leaders were jubilant today over the announcement by William Sterling Youngman, Jr., son of the late Lieutenant Governor, that he would support President Roosevelt's candidacy for re-election and that he would immediately begin the organization of the Youngman wing of the Republican party for Roosevelt.

Youngman, Jr., has been scheduled to enter the campaign for the Democratic cause by broadcasting a radio address tonight. It was explained that Youngman, Jr., will confine his activities to the presidential election and would not attempt to interfere in the contests for state offices.

Activities of the Democratic candidates over the weekend, although somewhat overshadowed by Governor Hurley made an appearance at the institutional dinner given by Socialist-Republican Frank Speare, at Middlesex County Council of the American Legion in the Hotel Commander, Cambridge.

Governor Curley avoided discussion of the political situation at the dinner, as did State Treasurer Hurley.

State Treasurer Hurley was the principal speaker at a meeting of the Boston College Club of Cambridge held yesterday afternoon in the Hotel Commander, Cambridge. The Democratic gubernatorial candidate is a former president of the organization. The members went on record in favor of the State Treasurers' candidacy, and all volunteered their services in the campaign. John Lacey Delaney is president of the club.

Firemen in Masks Fight Quincy Blaze

A second alarm was sounded by Deputy Chief John O'Neill. He estimated damage to be $3000. In the same one-story block, Superior Cleaners, Franklin Shoe Store and President Pharmacy were smoke damaged.

Girl Globe-Girdler Is 'Stuck' Overnight in Athens

LANDS AFTER FLIGHT FROM BRINDISI

By DOROTHY KILGALLEN
(International News Service, New York Evening Journal and Boston Evening American Staff Correspondent.)

(Copyright, 1936, by International News Service, New York Evening Journal and Boston Evening American.)

Athens, Oct. 5 (INS)—Well, it looks as though I'm stuck in Athens overnight.

But at least it's a good place to be. I've always wanted a chance to take a peep at one of the world's most ancient cities and having missed Rome in my hurry to catch a train the sights of Il Duce's capital had to be given the go-by.

Flying from Brindisi, Italy, by Imperial Airways plane, I reached the Athens seaplane base at 5:24 p. m. local time (10:24 a. m. E. S. T.)

I last glimpsed Brindisi through a cloud of spray against the windows of our big flying boat, the City of Stonehaven, as we taxied out of the bay.

We sighted the Isles of Greece at 1:40 p. m. Brindisi time.

They are everything Homer and Shelley wrote about them.

Flying over Corfu, the plane cast a moving shadow on white villas set in the green hills. The Mediterranean was like a huge, blue jewel. We saw Corinth and the ruins of its great canal. In the distance were great mountains overhung with white clouds. Their snow-capped summits seemed to run straight up into the sky.

I loved Italy, but Greece takes the cake for magnificent scenery.

We landed as a blue gold and red sunset swept the sky in back of the Parthenon. The new seaplane base, the hotel Grande Bretagne, where my reportorial daddy lived when he came to Athens for the first time, Samuel Insull.

We leave Athens at 7 a. m. tomorrow for Alexandria, Egypt, on other Imperial Airways plane. In the meantime, I'm going to try and find out if the Greeks have a word for Nellie Bly.

Perfect Setting

There was a perfect Italian setting under a blue and gold Italian sky as the airliner, "Hengist of Kent-haven" and I into the breath of a light breeze for the Lucrative hop to Athens.

The course lay for a few miles down the coast of Italy, then across the mouth of the Adriatic over Corfu, with a dim glimpse of Albania promised in the distance.

All the wild haste, all the worry and hustling of every hour since I left Boston's Logan Field for Montreal-On-Mair was rendered useless when I arrived here before dawn today, sleepy-eyed and breathless, only to learn that on any time was held up by precision boat winds.

As a result, all the fret of the journey from Boston, across Europe and Asia will be a series of quick hops without a second to be lost if I am to make the Pan American clipper from Manila to San Francisco in time to get back to New York by the all-commercial route in 21 days.

Adverse winds held up the Hindenburg, so that I missed a plane and train at Frankfort, and these may be more things along the long trans-Asiatic route, but I don't see how there'll be any nutter delay than the one on the road to Rome.

First in 3 Years

It's been three years since there has been a breakdown on the railroad from Florence to Rome.

Just 50 miles out of Rome the train came to a halt, and as I thought of the British train already steaming up to bear the Rome station, I was fit to be tied.

Forty-five minutes we were stymied out in the Italian countryside with some trouble in the locomotive's driving shafts.

So in Rome I broke a couple of Mussolini's laws by outdistancing railway policemen whom I dashed around the rear of the train and across the tracks just as the Brindisi rattler—itself 10 minutes late —chugged southward. I made a flying tackle and went with it.

At first I was glad of the wait in Brindisi.

There was nothing more tranquil on the whole wide earth, than the "serenade" I received from a group of Bavarians who came by the window of my train compartment and shouted for a speech.

The fact that I said a few words in English, which they didn't understand, made no difference in them. They cheered anyway.

Leo Kieran, one of my rivals whom I "met" in Frankfort, caught up with me in Brindisi, but H. R. Ekins, the other, went by air to another different route. He was last heard of in Belgrade, Yugoslavia, and will presumably try to make the Orient plane at Athens.

JESSE STRAUS, EX-ENVOY, DIES

New York, Oct. 5 (INS)—Jesse Isador Straus, former United States ambassador and France, and for years president of one of the world's largest department stores, is dead at his home here of pneumonia. He was 64.

A close friend of President Roosevelt, Straus was appointed to the ambassadorship March 26, 1933. He gave no sign of failing health until early this summer when he suffered while viewing a parade in Paris.

Shortly thereafter, Straus returned to this country and asked that he be relieved of his diplomatic post. He was replaced in Paris by William Bullitt, former ambassador to Russia.

He is survived by his wife, the former Irma Nathan, and three children, John Isador, Robert and Beatrice, his brother, Percy S. Straus, and three sisters also survive.

Funeral services for the late diplomat-merchant will be held at 10 a. m. tomorrow at the Temple Emanuel, with interment afterwards in the Straus family vault.

As president of R. H. Macy & Company, for 14 years, the dead diplomat saw his firm take a place as one of the greatest department stores in the world.

'Hook' School, Boys Caught In 10 Minutes

You could hardly blame two six-year-old Arlington lads for "hooking" school on a day as pleasant as today, but although their absence caused a stir and a bustle, with a fear of kidnaping felt, the liberty of the youngsters was shortlived.

Ten minutes after police had received the radio report that Paul Cravotti and Eugene Kane were missing from their class at the Appleton School, Arlington, two officers in a radio car sighted two boys munching apples beneath a tree on the Concord turnpike.

"And why, my little lads," asked the officers, "are you not in school today?"

"Aw, it's too good a day to go to school, so we stayed out," one of the "culprits" replied.

They were bundled into the car and taken to their homes.

SPAIN War Horrors TOLD

U. S. S. QUINCY RETURNS

Scuttling of a Spanish prison ship by the Reds, with 272 men going to their death like trapped rats, was revealed by United States Navy officers today with the arrival at Charlestown Navy Yard of the U. S. S. Quincy.

Other scenes of horror were told by Captain William F. Amsden and Commander Charleton Battle, executive officer, who described the revolution in Spain as the bloodiest in world history.

Built at Fore River and ordered into Spanish waters during her shakedown cruise on July 19, the Quincy has since been engaged in evacuating 500 refugees from Spain. She docked at the navy yard today after what is believed to be a record run of five and one-half days from Gibraltar.

There has been no exaggeration in the stories of mass executions, the Quincy's officers declared.

The scuttling of the prison ship they did not witness, but were told of it by the commander of a British cruiser.

Reds sailed the ship out of the harbor of Malaga with machine gun guards at the hatches to keep 200 members of La Guardia Civile, the crack police force, and 72 white navy officers below decks.

Three miles off shore the ship's seacocks were opened, the Reds scurried off, and she sank to the bottom, her hatches battened down over 272 souls who had no more chance for life than rats in a trap, placed in a barrel of water.

RAMMED BY RED SHIPS

In other cases, people were locked in the holds of small fishing boats which were taken out to be rammed by Red destroyers.

Scenes of destruction in Barcelona beggared description, according to the Quincy's commanding officers. Streets were literally running with blood. And it was there they received first hand information about mass executions of priests and nuns, they said.

Most violent of the Red forces, the officers said, are the members of P. O. U. M., secret order of Marxists who have boasted with F. A. I., the anarchists. Communists were described as really the most conservative on the Red side.

The Quincy's executive officers highly praised Captain J. C. Metze on the Concord turnpike.

Quincy Back from 'Bloodiest Revolution'

Back from Spanish waters today, to tell of horrors in Spain's bloody civil war, is this chief petty officer of the U. S. S. Quincy, D. H. Leonard, shown in happy reunion with wife, Mrs. D. H. Leonard, and two daughters, Ruth, three, and Priscilla, two. The vessel was engaged in evacuating Americans from war-torn Spain. This scene was taken shortly after the ship docked at the Charlestown Navy Yard.

Knowing well that one false move might have meant certain death to her friend, Andrew Rea, a member of the U. S. S. Quincy, just back from evacuation duty in Spain, Mary Cunningham of Saugus demonstrated her joy in seeing him today with a fond embrace.

bluejackets depended upon their uniforms for safety.

BLUEJACKETS LAND

The Quincy visited the island of Ivizo to evacuate 50 Americans the day before the place was captured by the Reds from the rebels. The uniforms of the landing party were not identified by combatants and the bluejackets moved down the main street, unarmed, under menacing guns with a hostile, muttering crowd following.

"I can tell you we were glad to get out of there," said Commander Battle, who was in the landing party.

Both officers agreed that more non-combatants have been slain than soldiers. They praised the work of the British naval ships, which gave close co-operation to the Quincy.

One of the Americans evacuated from Alacante to Barcelona was Floyd Gibbons, Hearst war correspondent, who was sped from Alacante to Marseilles by a British destroyer for a radio broadcast.

Relatives and friends of the Quincy's crew were on the dock to greet her as she came up the harbor in convoy of tugs this morning, docking sharply at 8:30, on the schedule announced two days ago.

Captain Amsden described her as "a great ship." She will be here two or three weeks making her acceptance cruises, then will go to San Diego to join the main battle fleet.

11 PORTS VISITED

The Quincy visited 11 foreign ports, some of them four or five times. She covered 16,674 miles since leaving Boston July 9. Of the 500 refugees evacuated, 350 were Americans, 75 were British subjects, the remainder subjects of 21 other nations. All but nine were landed at Marseilles or Villefranche.

Dated last Friday, the homeward-bound member of the ship's page, Yankee Clipper, contains an interesting account of the voyage from which the following are excerpts:

"Shortly after our arrival in Gibraltar we started out in earnest to do our work, evacuating refugees. At Motril, on the eastern coast of Spain, we saw a Spanish destroyer cruise around us at 500 yards, with her machine guns trained on us and her crew at general quarters. She was trying to protect herself from hostile aviators, so we guessed, for she knew that they would not dare endanger a foreign man-of-war.

"After taking on some refugees, which we disembarked at Marseilles, we headed back down the coast once more into Malaga. There we picked up an American refugee who had been jailed 'on suspicion' of rebel sentiments. Again we had a taste of the war, for we saw a loyal destroyer chased into port by a rebel cruiser.

"Palma gave us our next taste of the war. There we saw the bombing planes fly over from Minorca, the nearby island, drop their futile bombs, twice daily while the non-combatant population stood by defenseless.

"Gibraltar was the scene of the best naval action that we saw. The Jaime I, Spanish battleship, accompanied by a cruiser and a destroyer, headed around the rock of Gibraltar from the Mediterranean side and bombed Algeciras.

"While the cruiser and destroyer stood guard in the Straits the battleship headed in toward shore. After silencing an impotent land battery she proceeded into the harbor and held a brutal short range battle practice on the town of Algeciras.

"One of her 12-inch salvos landed, perhaps by accident, on a Rebel gunboat in the Algeciras harbor, blew it up and sank it.

"As we passed Malaga on our way up the coast, we saw what was probably the grand climax of our war time experiences, the bombing of the fleet oil reserve there. Three planes, three hits and three fires, one of them the most destructive we've ever seen. Over a million liters of fuel went up in smoke.

"Neither side was taking prisoners; it was a war to extermination."

ANITA LOUISE'S PALE HAIR DONE IN PAGE-BOY FASHION

This is the ninth of a series of intimate articles in which Peggy Doyle, Boston Evening American staff writer, interviews film notables in their Hollywood homes. Today's star is Anita Louise.

By PEGGY DOYLE

Hollywood, Oct. 5—Hollywood's Titania is even lovelier face to face than any midsummer night's dream.

And though she looks to be as fragile as the Dresden she collects, Anita ("Titania") Louise loves "a good, thick steak," plays a good game of tennis, rides and fences with uncommon skill and is an excellent swimmer.

At her Hollywood home, nearest thing to an Italian villa in this country, I had tea with the Warner Brothers' newest star.

Anita had come from the studio where her pet hairdresser had given her a new page-boy bang. Unfortunately, listening to my description, she took me at my word and had gold powder mixed with the shades of pale-gray, sheer wool trimmed coat and chartreuse satin pajamas she had on.

The hair-fix amused her. She is forever trying to change her appearance. And why? By changing her hair in a new fashion or letting it grow and putting it up, she says, she can get the studio to cast her in the sort of parts that are alternatingly telling her, "Anita, you go right back to your former appearance and fix your hair the way you always do."

Ideal Home

The admired pajamas she admitted, are her idea of attaining comfort. The opulent are relics from the studio, provided she can't "look down on" the changes to one of the dozens of pyjamas, bostaes-gowns or lounging robes that hang in her huge built-in wardrobe. These are in all the pastel shades, preferably yellow and white.

Against the beautiful Anita lives in, with its off-white motif and muted accents, is a perfect background for her.

"Mother is responsible for it," said Anita, "as she is responsible for anything else that's nice about me. She was an interior decorator, Mrs. Ann Beresford of New York, before we came out here."

The living-room in which we were having tea has white walls, a honey-colored carpet, antiqued ivory satin drapes and furniture upholstered in pale gold, or pastel-blue or beige-pink damask and delicately carved white gilded chairs, and flower-centered white needlepoint footstools and piano-bench. These were done by Anita on the set between "shootings"; it developed.

Antique ivory satin, edged in enough of the faintest green to emphasize fashion, drape the floor-length windows with their ivory Venetian sprays.

Lending not an insignificant note to the decorative scheme are the elegant gilt French cabinet, with its collection of Dresden cups and saucers and tiny figurines, and the great golden harp near the piano at which Anita practices daily.

An accomplished pianist and harpist, she also plays the violin—her's is 200 years old—and an ancient lute.

What's Next?

The only dark note in the room —in the entire house, for that matter—is the coal-black Scottie, Wee Thistle, busily tracing an ever-changing pattern of paw indentations on the deep-pile honey carpet as his mistress discussed her last picture, Lloyd Douglas' "Green Light," her next, "The Gentleman from Kimberley," with Paul Muni, the imminence of movies in color, and the advantages of costume pictures.

"It was a pleasure and a lesson in acting to work with Sir Cedric Hardwick in 'Green Light'. He gives a splendid performance, and we all feel that Director Frank Borsage has achieved a work of art in this production," she said.

"And the dog, he's quite remarkable. He's not a professional dog-actor. Mr. Borsage saw him running along the beach at Malibu and decided he was the Irish setter for 'Green Light'.

"My next picture? 'The Gentleman from Kimberley,' about the Kimberley mines, of course. Paul Muni is to be the gentleman and I am looking forward to working with him."

But of more intimate concern to the naturally blonde—and thoughtful—Anita is the blonde-into-brunette epidemic that is raging in the Cinema-City.

"I don't think there's the least doubt that color movies will supersede movies in black and white within the next four or five years," she said. "They're constantly experimenting and making real advances in the taking of color pictures, and since the color camera is notably partial to blondes I cannot understand why so many of Hollywood's blondes are darkening their tresses. As for me I was born a blonde and I'll never do anything to interfere with nature's color-scheme."

At Miss Louise's elbow was the current best-seller, "Gone with the Wind," to which David Selznick has purchased the movie rights.

"Everybody in Hollywood right now is busy doing the casting," Anita informed me. "I'd like to see Margaret Sullavan do Scarlett and I'd love to attempt Melanie, the girl who married the man Scarlett loved. I think a great deal could be done with the role. But who should be 'Red' Butler, we're all wondering?"

Her One Wish

At 20, a veteran in the theatre with an enviable list of stage and screen hits to her credit, Anita Louise makes but one wish—to do a play and, preferably, "Pride and Prejudice."

Three years ago, she did "One Sunday Afternoon" here with Lyle Talbot and ever since she has been hoping to find time enough in her screen picture to do a play on Broadway. She hasn't yet but Harry Warner has promised her that when a play comes along suitable to her and potential screen material he will wave the magic wand and grant her wish.

Meanwhile, she is finding life more than acceptable both at the studio and at home.

"I've had infinite variety in my roles, which is one of the most important things that can happen to an actor. I do adult, though, that I'd rather do a costume picture than any other. There's something about a costume, combined with a good role, naturally, that helps an actor fluff off his own identity and actually be the character he is portraying."

Another interview with a movie star at home by Peggy Doyle will appear in the Boston Evening American tomorrow.

Associated Press Tells:

How Soviet Rules Citizen's Daily Life

(Editor's note: What does the average citizen of Soviet Russia do these days? What are his amusements? Does he own property? What of his family life?—The following story is an answer to those questions and others on life in the socialized state.)

By CHARLES P. NUTTER
Associated Press Foreign Staff

Moscow, Oct. 5—Tovarish (comrade) Ivan Ivanovitch Alexandroff doesn't belong to the Rotary Club, drive his own car, own his home or speak out his mind on party politics and who should be elected president.

The state takes care of all those things for him.

And if he has a non-conformist mind, he keeps his thoughts to himself or finds he is trouble.

For there is probably no more regimented life in the world today than that of John Citizen of the Soviet Union.

He does what he is told with no questions asked, reads what the state thinks he should, lives where he is told, stays close to home and minds his own business.

He and his family live, eat and sleep in one room, for divine guarantees are at a premium in modern Russia. If he wants to take a vacation he orders his railroad ticket from three to six days in advance, and usually gets it.

Joins Army at 19

He joins the army at 19 if he is physically fit and serves two years compulsory training, whereafter he is placed on the reserve list, subject to call.

He can't take a flier in real estate or the stock market. He can't land is for sale and there is no stock market. He doesn't know much about what goes on in the outside world, for there is little foreign news in the six-page government newspaper he reads.

If he buys his own newspaper he stands in a queue to get it. He also stands in queue to get a soft drink, buy his bread and bacon, catch a street car or taxi, or put his savings in the bank.

The queue is the symbol of life in Russia today. If there are people waiting to catch a streetcar, they will be lined up patiently in a queue.

Generally he knows no foreigners, gets no mail, magazines or periodicals from abroad. He reads a newspaper avidly, but finds it pretty dull at times because the favored topics are articles exhorting him to work harder and better and telling him of the preparation for the defense of the nation against Fascism, capitalism and the bourgeoisie.

He has a few diversions. There are no country clubs or golf clubs, but other sports are gradually taking hold under state tutelage. He has no family automobile—the number of automobiles in Russia is counted in the hundreds, not millions.

He has freedom of thought as long as it is what he is supposed to think. If he wants to denounce Leon Trotzky he'll get an audience, but if he reverses that order he'll get in trouble.

There's no such thing as speaking out one's mind on the administration. John Citizen never escapes the surveillance of the secret police, who know his every movement.

He goes to church if he likes, but that makes him a suspect, for there is no God officially acknowledged in Russia. If he thinks there is, his children may denounce him, for at school they have been taught otherwise.

Wife Works

He loses control of his family quickly, because the children are weaned away from the fireside by the state at an early age. His wife generally works, usually in a factory.

He has little choice in foods and clothing. He takes what is at hand and is glad to get it. He generally buys his summer clothes in winter, and winter clothes in summer because they are cheaper and more plentiful then.

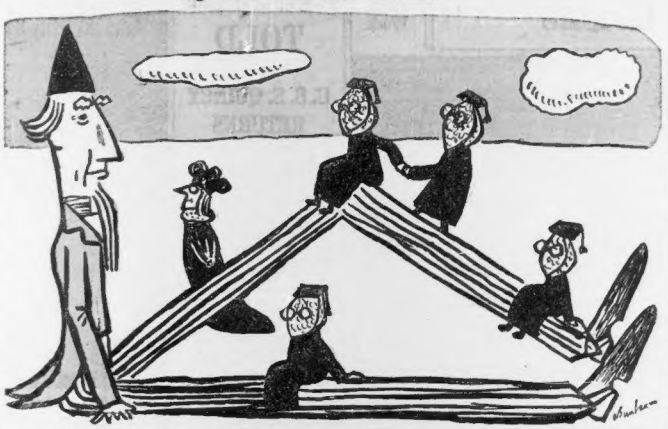
He always carries his passport when he goes to work because he cannot go anywhere. He needs it to register at a hotel, enter a public building or buy a railroad ticket.

He rests every sixth day instead of seventh, observing thus a six-day week. Sunday as a day of rest has been abolished.

From capitalistic standards he has a pretty dull life, but he does remarkably little grousing about it.

GULLIBLE'S TRAVAILS

By Uncle Samuel Gullible



I BECAME so dissatisfied with the geometrical suit, which was made for me by the astronomical tailors attached to the court of the King of LAPUTA, that I finally rebelled.

"This suit makes me look silly," I complained.

"I'll make you look a lot sillier before I get through with you, Uncle Samuel," responded the King, playfully.

However, I made such an uproar that the King finally permitted me to don my old clothes. Torn and ragged though they were, I liked my old-fashioned striped trousers and my long-tailed coat better than the new raiment the King's astrologers and mathematicians had designed for me by algebra and logarithms.

But on one point the King was obdurate. He made me continue to wear my footscap.

"You ought to be thankful," said the King, "that I do not require you to wear a monkey's cap, and carry a tin cup."

Indeed, I was fearful it might even come to this with me, the King being so fanciful. However, in the end I had the laugh on the King.

In LAPUTA, you must know, some of the Professors were disguised as Nuts, and some of the Nuts were disguised as Professors. I often told the King I wondered how he could tell them apart.

"It isn't necessary to tell them apart," replied the King. "That's the beauty of the system."

But one day while the King was in the palace yard, cracking nuts with his 8-000-pound steam nutcracker, he accidentally cracked Professor Jugful, by mistake.

The King was terribly worried at first. But it turned out all right, although the nutcracker was broken, and we had all had a merry laugh at the King's expense.

Fortunately the nutcracker had hit the Professor right on the head.

KNOX SPEAKS AT BIG RALLY IN BOSTON TONIGHT

By BERNARD J. DOHERTY

Confident of Republican victory in this state and nation, Colonel Frank Knox, nominee for Vice-President, is swung through Massachusetts today with a smashing attack on the Raw Deal and its support by Communists.

Afternoon speeches at New Bedford and Fall River preceded his major address at Symphony Hall here tonight.

More than 600 cheered him at Acushnet Park, New Bedford, when he scored the efforts of the Roosevelt processing tax upon the mills of that textile city.

200 CARS IN ESCORT

Colonel Knox, motoring from his home in Manchester, N. H., was met at the New Bedford city line by an escort of approximately 200 automobiles and two sound trucks.

Through streets lined with hundreds the vice presidential candidate was taken to Acushnet Park where an old fashioned chicken dinner was served.

The rally was opened by Charles W. Deasy, chairman of the New Bedford Republican City Committee.

Colonel Knox was introduced by Fred W. Steele, Bristol County chairman, after he had presented Congressman Charles L. Gifford of Barnstable and Joseph Martin Martin, Jr., of North Attleboro. Martin is eastern campaign manager for the Landon-Knox ticket.

Returning from Fall River, Colonel Knox will be the dinner guest of the Women's Republican Club of Massachusetts at the club's headquarters, 46 Beacon street.

The Symphony Hall speech tonight of Colonel Knox will be broadcast over station WBZ from 9:30 to 10 o'clock. Amplifiers have been installed to carry the voice of the Colonel outside the hall.

More than 200 prominent Republicans from all sections of the state will have seats on the platform and former Governor Channing H. Cox will introduce the vice presidential candidate. Chairman Sinclair Weeks of the Republican State Committee, will preside.

ALL JOIN IN

The entire Republican state ticket, headed by John W. Haigis, candidate for governor, and Representative Henry Cabot Lodge, Jr., will participate in the speaking.

Approximately 100 young women from the Women's Republican Club of Massachusetts will act as ushers. Representatives of the Independent Coalition of American Women, under whose sponsorship the former Governor Alfred E. Smith of New York spoke for Governor Landon last Thursday in New York city, will attend a booth and distribute national and state literature.

The Colonel will be attended by a guard of honor composed of veterans of the Spanish and World Wars, having served actively in both conflicts.

VERMONTER SONG WINNER

Today's winner of the daily prize in the Landon Song Contest, George D. Hallowell, of Woodstock, Vt., adds another score to the ledger of the male entries.

He will have an opportunity to compete for the national prize of $1000.

Besides the grand prize, there are other awards of $500 and 25 prizes of $20 each.

Write now. The contest closes next Monday. Compose lyrics to be sung to the tune of "Oh, Susanna," to be used as the Republican presidential campaign song.

Oh, here comes Alf of Kansas,
where the budget pleaser be,
Now watch, oh fellow Landonites
—see F. D. up a tree!

He's got the goods, he knows his stuff; do you need to ask me why?
He'll work hard for a job for you, if you will only try.

REFRAIN

Oh, Alf Landon—there's F. D. up a tree!
Now we'll all work together to set this country free!

Alf won't forget the farmer, he came up from the sod.
Now he won't have an A. A. A.—
He'll leave some things to God!
He knows the way you fellers feel about this tommyrot.
He's a real old time American, and boys he cant be BOUGHT.
Alf's got no use for dictators,—He knows where THAT stuff leads,
And he won't hand out white collar jobs to spongers dressed in tweeds!
He knows you're swamped with taxes, alphabets around your necks,
But good old Alf will pull us out, he'll save us from the wreck.
The New Deal messed the nation up, it's put us in the hole,
And now it's trying to pull us out by handing out the dole.
But Alf will come, with courage rare, and start mill wheels a-turning;
Just cast your vote for Landon, and the mortgage you'll be burning!

Roland H. Cochrane, once a United States marine, died at sunrise on Friday, in the Arizona lethal gas chamber. His breathing deeply, "smiled once," became unconscious, was pronounced dead seven minutes after the "cyanide gas eggs" were dropped into a pan underneath the chair in which he sat. He had killed a man in a holdup, on which his profit was $2.40.

Crime does not pay, and by the way, the way to discourage crime apparently is to frighten the criminals.

Kidnaping, once a well-organized, profitable industry, has diminished, almost disappeared, since the national government started hunting down kidnapers as wolves are hunted.

It is one thing for the criminal to appear in court, backed by shifty criminal lawyers. It is another thing to be hunted on highways and by-ways and shot at sight. The new Cuban idea, execution 24 hours after conviction, may prove to be a good idea.

Neville Chamberlain, British Chancellor of the Exchequer, supplies news:

First, England, for her safety, will rely on navy. She once relied on continental powers financed by her, to do her fighting, to some extent.

Recently she has relied on soft and hard words at Geneva. And has discovered that they "butter no Ethiopian parsnips."

Second, Mr. Chamberlain indicates that England does not intend to play any major part in land fighting, in any European war whatever, even if England is mixed up with it.

If England's continental friends insist on war, England may send her smoking warships and blockading surface ships to help her friends, but no more millions of young men for Flanders Fields, or any other continental field. For one thing, many of the young men have declared that they would not go.

Mobs riot in Paris because "the franc has fallen so low." They might better wonder why it remains at so high a level? The original gold franc was nominally worth 19 cents, gold. Americans paid six or seven cents of our perfectly good money for it. Then the word "gold" was abandoned, making the franc merely paper, like our dollar, with the difference that the United States HAS the gold. That should have brought the franc on a par with the dollar, but, the French government took 29 per cent from the four cent value of the franc, reducing its value to below three cents. In spite of that, the franc now sells at 4.66 cents in American money.

Mr. Blum, first French Jewish prime minister, or somebody working with him, must know how to maintain the value of money even when it is pure paper.

Seize Pickpocket Suspects at Rally

New Bedford, Oct. 5—Excitement preceded the speaking at Acushnet Park today in Colonel Frank Knox's swing through Massachusetts, two Boston detectives arresting seven alleged pickpockets—where the officers had gone to New Bedford after only one.

The dining room at the park was thronged when Sergeant Coleman Hayes and Special Officer William Conden, of Boston dived into the crowded cocktail bar adjoining—and came up with the seven light-fingered lads.

To the van of the prize seizure was William King, for whom the detectives had a vagabond warrant. With a record as a pickpocket, according to police, King was figured as most likely to be following crowds and the Knox appreciative rally looked good to the officers.

Sure enough, they sighted King in the cocktail bar, but they also sighted six other men with pickpocket records.

Laxatives are only makeshifts. A mere bowel movement doesn't get at the cause. NEW RIOTING IN LONDON, REDS SEIZED IN PARIS

tered skirmishes broke out at a number of points.

FULL DOWN BARRICADES

Police pulled down barricades erected by Communist demonstrators along the projected line of march. Approximately 100 persons were arrested and between 200 and 300 treated for minor injuries before order was restored in the district.

Officials estimated a crowd of 20,000 lay in wait for the 6000 blackshirted Fascists. The majority of the demonstrators, they said, were Jewish residents of the East End who had clashed previously with Mosley's supporters.

Six thousand police were thrown around the area with an airplane overhead reporting the fighting and reporting incidents by radio to the ground forces.

Fascists had planned to meet at a central location but their opponents, chanting "They Shall Not Pass," disrupted the gathering.

HITS AT 'RED TERROR'

Sir Oswald, who drove in the parade scene before the fighting started, objected vigorously to police intervention but eventually was persuaded to postpone plans for the procession.

He accused the government of surrendering to the "Red Terror" and asserted the rioting indicated necessity for Fascism in Great Britain.

His political foes rained bricks at the disordered Fascist parade, one of which crashed through the windshield of Sir Oswald's automobile.

230 Hurt in Paris Red-Fascist Riots

Paris, Oct. 5—Fierce riots in which 230 persons, mostly Nationalists, were injured and 100 arrested, raged through the streets of Paris when a band of 20,000 Nationalists clashed with police in an attempt to halt a scheduled mass meeting of 250,000 Communists.

Taxicabs were smashed and overturned, windows were broken by flying bricks and stones hurled by the Nationalists and Communists alike as "hand grenades." Many heads were battered by swinging police clubs, and still others were injured by charging horses of the mounted guard, who were called into action.

All available police reserves including 20,000 steel helmeted mobile guards bearing rifles, were rushed to the Porte Des Poupes where the Communist mass meeting was scheduled.

The three-cornered melee between Communists, Nationalists and police lasted nearly all day before the Nationalists were finally dispersed and order in the city reestablished.

Police clubs and butts swung left and right and Communists were reported using brass knuckles and blackjacks.

An airplane was mustered into service by the police to spot the most serious clashes and signal reserves to concentrate there.

28 POLICEMEN HURT

Only a few of those injured were wounded seriously enough to be taken to a hospital. Of the casualties list were 28 policemen.

City Councilor Gallien, who led one of the Nationalist contingencies into a fierce clash with the police in front of a cafe they had barricaded, was also injured when police charged the group and tear Gallard and his followers with their clubs.

The fighting—the worst experienced on the streets of Paris since the bloody Stavisky riots of February, 1934, broke out when Colonel De La Rocque's Nationalists, many of them wearing their World War decorations, sought to march on the Princes to present the scheduled Communist mass meeting.

Colonel De La Rocque, head of the disbanded Fascist organization, "Cross of Fire," pledged his followers to stop the meeting.

Singing the Marseillaise and shouting "France for the French," via La Rocque," the Nationalists formed a cordon around the park early this morning just as thousands of Reds, carrying Soviet banners and waving flags, began to arrive for the mass meeting.

Police and mobile guards rushed to the scene and formed a barricade around the park with lines confronting those of the Nationalists whom they proceeded to charge in such them back and make room for the entering Communists.

REDS HOLD MEET

Driven back from the park through the streets of Paris' elegant Auteuil residential district, Cri de la Rocque's men engaged in a series of fierce hand-to-hand encounters with groups of Communists and with groups of police.

Windows were smashed by flying missiles and overturned taxis were used as barricades from behind which shots were fired by Communists at police allies.

Cri de la Rocque's men were finally driven back and after again massing for a brief sweep in the heart of Paris at the Arc de Triomphe, where they sang the Marseillaise at the tomb of the unknown soldier they were finally dispersed.

Meanwhile, like Communists, permitted to stage their demonstration in the Parc Des Princes, preceded with the day's program of speeches devoted to attacks on the government's devaluation program and an appeal for aid in behalf of the beleaguered Red regime of Spain.

"Let's soak the rich"

Marcel Cachin, Andre Marty, who led the Black Sea Fleet mutiny during the Communist Revolution, and Maurice Thorez, Madrid's Red regime will fall "unless France comes to the rescue."

This drew loud cheers from the mass meeting which sang with shouts of:

"Planes, guns and munitions for Spain."

"Lift the blockade."

ELY ADVOCATES DEAL DEFEAT

Chicago, Oct. 5 (AP)—Joseph B. Ely, former Democratic Governor of Massachusetts, said today:

"The best thing that can happen to the Democratic party is to have the New Deal defeated."

Passing through Chicago to open a series of five addresses under the auspices of the National Independent Democrats, Ely declared at a press conference President Roosevelt's reelection would put the party "out of business for quite a few years."

"The Ritchies, the Bakers, the Smiths, the Reeds, the Colbys and many others who built the party are out," he said. "I think Mr. Roosevelt, in his acts, has been persuaded by Mr. Tugwell, Mr. Wallace and others that these are the policies which will save America.

"That's where we disagree."

Ely asserted the present campaign was a campaign in opposition to the Roosevelt policies, which he said in his opinion have destroyed the reputation of industry."

Tax Cash Waste Is Charged

"Reckless extravagance" and "wilful waste of the taxpayers' money" today were charged against the municipal public buildings department by City Councillor Robert Gardiner Wilson, Jr., of Dorchester.

On a tax-possessed Jamaica Plain tenement block, assessed for only $2000, the councillor charged, the department already has expended $5000 for remodelling work and is still at it, with 23 workmen employed.

VISITS PREMISES

This is despite the fact, Wilson asserted, that the city never can hope to get back the $5000 expended and the $2500 due for back taxes on property he characterizes as in a "run-down neighborhood."

Wilson visited the premises at 6, 8 and 10 Daniella terrace today and the start, he said, of expenditures being made by the Public Buildings Department on "gold-plated" projects.

"There are 31 apartments in the Daniella terrace block, Councillor Wilson said, but despite the money already expended on "remodelling," there is no furnace in the house and apparently no intention of putting one in. The only other than that of the individual apartment stoves.

"OUT OF PROPORTION"

"Workers, consisting of carpenters, plasterers, plumbers and other artisans, are practically rebuilding the premises far out of proportion to the class of neighborhood, he is ared.

"The work backs up to the New Haven Railroad tracks and a granite wall, reaching to the second floor, blocks out light from the first floor. The street itself is a deeded, unpaved terrace.

According to the councillor, he will summon Roswell G. Hall, head of the department, to appear before an executive session of the council and explain the "reckless extravagance" and "wilful waste."

ESTEY SPURNS BALLOT QUIZ

Frazier W. Estey, Republican member of the State Ballot Law Commission, walked out of a hearing called today on the protest of the nomination papers of William H. McMaster of Cambridge, Union Party candidate for Governor.

"I decline to sit in any such ridiculous proceedings," Estey told Chairman Thomas P. Glynn, after the latter had tried in vain to prevail upon him to remain on the bench.

Shortly thereafter Chairman Glynn called it all off, and announced that the commission had held its "final" meeting.

The protest against McMaster had been filed by Attorney Henry E. Lawlor, counsel for the Democratic State Committee, but inasmuch as the ballots are being printed now — with McMaster's name on them—Lawlor didn't even bother to appear at the hearing.

Furthermore, although the protest had been inaugurated by Chairman Joseph McGrath of the Democratic State Committee, the commission received a letter from Treasurer Charles F. Hurley, Democratic nominee for governor, saying he didn't mind McMaster being on the ballot.

"I believe in the inalienable right of any citizen to seek public office," Hurley wrote. "I have complete confidence in the judgment of the electorate."

Sic the face of all this, Estey moved that the commission adjourn.

"Won't you wait 10 minnes for Mr. Lawlor?" Chairman Glynn pleaded.

Fourth Mid-Air Crash Victim Dies

New York, Oct. 5 (AP) — Fred Davis, 22, died today, the fourth victim of an airplane collision that sent two wrecked ships plunging into a meadow 50 feet from Long Island highway crowded with Sunday traffic.

Investigators began a three-way inquiry into the mid-air crash.

had been sewed with twine, but the twine was broken.

He opened the bag, dropped it into the water, horrified. The bag sank but the leg floated and he drew the leg ashore again.

Then he and three companions ran all the way across the airport to the administration building to summon police.

The leg had been cleanly severed from the hip with sharp instruments, perhaps in a professional hand. Its muscles were fairly well developed.

The foot was small, regulier; perhaps a size two, alone. The toes were slightly cramped as if a pointed shoe had been worn for some time, yet this may have resulted from a muscular contraction.

The opinion of police was that it had been in the water for about two weeks.

Dredging from the stern of the police boat Edwin U. Curtis, Patrolman John J. Smith and Patrolman Joseph P. Doyle recovered the burlap bag. It was a brown, ordinary kind of bag. The twine that had been used to sew the neck was still in it.

CHECK MISSING GIRLS

Bag and twine may be important clues in determining whether a crime has been committed and the identity of the criminal.

The police boat took the leg to Battery wharf from which point it was sent to northern mortuary for examination by Dr. Brickley.

Inspector William Ross, in charge of the headquarters missing persons bureau, began a check of his reports.

With Torriel, when he found the leg, were three other WPA workers, Anthony Barbera, 19, and Louis Ingham, 26, both of Everett street, East Boston, and Anthony Lasola, 18, of Sumner street, East Boston.

The Susan Geary case, recalled by today's finding, was a sensation of two decades ago, developed from the finding of her torso in a suitcase off Winthrop, not far from the scene of the discovery this afternoon.

Her severed limbs were found five weeks later in another suitcase in Boston Harbor.

Her head was found in the harbor by a diver.

The victim was identified as an actress who had been reported missing, the crime was established as illegal surgery and two men were sentenced to prison.

Fights Splitting Bonus With Wife

Seeking to void an order to pay his wife one-third of his bonus money and to void a six-month jail sentence imposed in Charlestown court, Frederick Latorella of Charlestown, filed petitions in Supreme Court today for a writ of prohibition and a writ of error.

The petitions are directed against Judge Charles S. Sullivan of the Charlestown jurisdiction.

In the action, Latorella cites that his wife was awarded support of $9 a week in Roxbury court and that since he has been paying this she brought another action in Charlestown court after he had received his bonus.

The Charlestown action resulted in an order by Judge Sullivan to pay Mrs. Latorella $100 in a lump sum by October 1. In paying the $100, Latorella revealed, he said, by Judge Sullivan that he had received $1,500.50 as a bonus.

This resulted, according to Latorella, in Judge Sullivan ordering a $500 payment in a lump sum and imposing a six-month sentence, with the case continued until October 15.

It is charged by Latorella that he was denied the right of appeal by Judge Sullivan.

Somerville Man Accused of Fraud

Less than 24 hours from the time he walked out of Plymouth jail, after serving a six-months sentence for fraud, Michael J. Garraghy of Somerville was in Roxbury court today facing another similar charge.

Specifically he was accused of larceny of $17 from Arthur Mitchell of Eustis street, Roxbury. Held in $500, Garraghy was given a continuance until October 21. Police said it was his practice to follow death notices in newspapers, then visit survivors and offer to get them good jobs—for a fee.

Protest New Waltham Bank

Protest was registered at the State House today against chartering a new commercial bank in Waltham to be known as the Merchants Bank and Trust Company of Waltham.

Attorney William J. Bannan, representing the National Bank of Waltham declared that his bank served the district adequately, having 26,000 accounts, not only in Waltham but in Watertown and Newton.

He argued further that the Federal Reserve board had stated "frequently" that there should be only one commercial bank in Waltham.

On the other hand, Attorney John J. Foster, representing 25 petitioners for the new bank, said that between $50,000 and $60,000 in deposits can be secured immediately and that many Waltham businesses are banking outside the city.

Others who opposed the charter included Walter H. Amesbury, treasurer of Waltham Hospital; John A. McCarthy of the Waltham Cooperative Bank and Charles F. Allen, president of the Waltham Savings Bank.

BILBAO WOMEN MASSACRED BY SPAIN REDS

BULLETIN

London, Oct. 5—Women in Bilbao who organized a demonstration demanding surrender of the Spanish city to its rebel besiegers were "cruelly massacred" by Loyalist militiamen who turned machine guns on the women, according to an Exchange Telegraph report today from Lisbon.

Madrid, Oct. 5—A hard driving Socialist column, battling for the life of the capital, the government reported today, split the insurgent arc-like grip on the city.

Government troops, a ministry of war communique said, pushing westward from their base at Santa Cruz Del Retamar, captured the important road junction town of Maqueda and fought their way to within a few miles of Santa Olalla on the road to the insurgent supply base at Talavera De La Reina.

The wedge movement, if correctly reported, would separate Fascist forces operating out of Toledo from their comrades to the northwest, completely breaking their line of communications.

Betty Alden on 'Beacon Hill'

Private Circus Features Debut Of Betsy McKean

By BETTY ALDEN

BETSY McKEAN now has a good idea of the thrill which P. T. Barnum experienced when he successfully produced the "greatest show on earth" . . .

Saturday evening, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Pratt McKean put on a big private circus to enliven the customary procedure of a coming out party . . . with the result that the affair will be remembered as the most novel and interesting of the whole debutante season . . .

NANCY COCHRANE

Nothing was lacking but a roaring lion and a missing link . . .

The "big top" was set up on the lawn of Willow Tree Farm, the McKean estate in Beverly Farms and inside, the guests found a midway, a large dance floor and side shows . . .

At one of the stands an old Coney Island photographer held forth . . . his customers had an uproarious time being photographed as they sat in a cardboard automobile against a "lovely" scenic background which had seen better days . . . and sticking their heads through a hole in a life-sized papier mache image of Pop Eye, to have their picture taken impersonating the famous comic cartoon character . . .

Those who felt a bit reckless tried their luck with the games of chance and slot machines . . . using artificial money . . . while over in one corner a voice recited the famous line so well known to all sideshow barkers—"Hit the nigger on the head and get a five-cent see-gar" . . .

Many an erstwhile pitcher and Harvard baseball star tried to bounce a ball off the bobbing shiny head which protruded from a hole in a canvas screen . . .

Of course, the feature event of the party was dancing on the wide hardwood floor erected in the center of the tent, and to add a real mardi gras atmosphere each dancer wore a comic paper hat and colored cotton gloves . . .

Harvard Show's Tunes Make Hit

DURING THE NIGHT (it was practically daybreak before they sang "Goodnight, Ladies") Ruby Newman discovered Cam Newberry in the crowd and it was no time before the orchestra was playing all the dance hits of last year's Hasty Pudding show . . . Several of these songs, which have become so popular with the deb set, were composed by Cam Newberry . . .

Gaspar Bacon, Jr., and Harrett Wendle, who were also in the last Pudding show, were on hand to croon the choruses to their girl friends as they danced . . . Later, Ruby and the orchestra played for the first time, the music from "Red, Hot and Blue," the new musical show, which has its world premiere at the Colonial Wednesday evening, for the benefit of the Community Health Association . . .

It would be easier to mention which of the prominent North Shore folks were not under the "big top" than to try to remember any of that vast crowd of dancers . . . though Mrs. Francis P. Sears and her son, Francis, Jr., who danced frequently with Nancy Cochrane, Louis Shaw and his wife, Harcourt Amory, Mrs. Quincy Shaw McKean, John Roosevelt and Barbara Cushing in a twosome again, Peggy Pierce, Henry Coolidge and Anne Howard all seemed to be having the time of their lives . . .

Van Antwerp Twins Make Debut

IT'S PRETTY DIFFICULT to keep track of the four sets of twins on this year's debutante list . . . but at least we know where two and one-half sets of them were today at luncheon time . . . They were at the Ritz-Carlton where Mimi and Betsy Van Antwerp, twin daughters of Mr. and Mrs. George T. Van Antwerp, were making their bow to society at a luncheon given by their mother . . .

Besides Mimi and Betsy, the other twins present were Anna Hobbs, whose twin, Clementine, was unable to be there, and Nancy and Penelope Hill . . .

The hostesses wore forest green velvet dresses with flaring peplums and wide sleeves . . . their hats were green felt berets with pheasant feathers, and there were orchids pinned on their shoulders . . . Mrs. Van Antwerp's gown was also green, though of a lighter shade, and her accessories were brown . . . Her twin sister, Mrs. Leverett Saltonstall Tuckerman, received with them, and wore a black silk suit with coral accessories and a black picture hat . . .

Novel Table Decorations

WHEN THE INFORMAL RECEPTION was over and all the guests began to find their place cards, there were a lot of excited comments about the novel table decorations . . . each little table was covered with silver blue gauze and the centerpieces were mounds of white flowers and silver feathers, with little silver place cards . . .

Debutante festivities for the Misses Van Antwerp are just beginning, for early in November they are to be presented in New York at a large luncheon given by Mrs. Kenelm Winslow at 1160 Fifth avenue . . . and there are to be several smaller parties given for them in Gotham . . .

They are graduates of the Lee School, and granddaughters of the late Mr. and Mrs. William Van Antwerp of New York . . .

Miss Anne Peterson, whose exhibit of portraits will open with a private view and tea at the Vose Galleries, Wednesday afternoon, has invited several friends to assist at the tea tables on that occasion . . . Among them are Margaret Farnsworth, Barbara Marston, Polly Paine, Ruth Coffin, Elaine Rogers, Mrs. Channing Williams, Mrs. Frederick M. Jones and Miss Emilie H. Jones.

Win Nassau Trip? Just 100 Words!

TIME SHORT TO SOLVE PUZZLE

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

Nassau, the port of romance. Southern skies, swinging palms, blue waters.

Just the place to go lazy and not be ashamed of it.

Idle hours, having fun doing nothing important. Just a cabana kind of life.

It's all yours. That is, if your letter answering the query, "Should Sam Dodsworth take his wife Fran back into his life?" is judged the best among the competitors. Your chance is as good as anyone's.

Just limit your answer to 100 words. And have it in no later than October 7.

Do you know the story of Fran and Dodsworth? They're a middle-class couple, with one grown daughter, Emily, now married.

One could call them well-to-do. Well-to-do enough to allow Sam to retire and afford a European trip for himself and Fran.

Meets Romance

Europe brings emotional difficulties. Fran meets with the romances. She always futilely wished for, in the person of Baron Kurt Von Oberndorf.

Sam has met solace in Edith Cortright.

Then reality comes crashing down upon the Dodsworth when a grandchild is born to them.

What should Sam do? Fran is willing to return to life with her husband although it means giving up all that's interesting in life.

Sam has been hurt. Edith Cortright has been healing his wounds. He has a lot to forgive.

Furnish a solution to this problem. In addition, to the trip to Nassau, there is an award of a handsome $100 Gruen watch. Also cash gifts of $25, $10, $5, $3, and $2.

The Loew's State and Orpheum theatres which are sponsoring this contest with the Boston Evening American will give 25 pairs of tickets for the week of October 9, when the film will be shown there.

The picture is a Sam Goldwyn production released through United Artists.

Write now and address your letter to the Dodsworth Contest, Beatrice Fairfax, 5 Winthrop square, Boston.

RUTH CHATTERTON MARY ASTOR

Few Simple Test Rules

All letters shall answer the question: SHOULD SAM TAKE FRAN BACK?

None shall exceed 100 words.

Each shall be mailed to Dodsworth Contest, Beatrice Fairfax, Boston Evening American, 5 Winthrop Square, Boston.

No letter received after midnight, October 7, shall be considered.

Each entrant shall accept the Judges' decision as final.

The following shall be the awards:

First: Free, all-expense trip to Nassau, with two days in New York.

Second: $100 Gruen man's or woman's watch.

Third: $25 cash.

Fourth: $10 cash.

Fifth and sixth: $5 cash each.

Trinity Alumnae Open Lectures

By MARGUERITE DOWNEY

IF LAST EVENING'S FORUM, sponsored by the Boston Chapter of Trinity College alumnae, is any indication of future success, the organization may look forward to the best patronized lecture series in Boston.

Over a thousand subscribers attended the opening talk at St. Clement's auditorium and an exchange of ideas and forum discussion supplanted the usual lengthy lecture. The topic of the evening's discussion was "Consumer's Co-operative."

Rev. Michael J. Ahern, S. J., professor of geology an anthropology at Weston College, was chairman of the evening. Rev. Dr. M. M. Coady of St. Francis Xavier was the chief speaker. Assisting him was Rev. Francis J. Driscoll, S. J., professor of economics at Boston College.

Spokesmen of the laymen's viewpoint were Henry F. Maguire, well-known business man, and Leo Drew O'Neill, head of the finance department at Boston University.

Next Panel

"Social Justice in Relation to Capital and Labor: Minimum Wage" is the subject of the next panel discussion, which is scheduled for the 25th of this month. Presenting the pros and cons of this question will be John A. Garvey, Edward Joyce, William E. Kerrish, Rev. Joseph F. M. Donnell, S. J., John J. Mahoney and J. Arthur Moriarty.

"Social Security" will be discussed at the last of this series. Rev. Robert J. Barry, director of the Catholic Charitable Bureau, will be the night's guest speaker, and representative from various business will be Cornelius T. O'Connor, M. D., professor in the Boston College School of Social Work. John Pearson, regional director of New England Federal Social Securities, Walter V. McCarthy, commissioner of Massachusetts Public Welfare, and William H. Bixby.

The discussions at last night's affair was intelligent and thought-provoking . . . the excellent program attracting many professional men to the gathering. It seems to be definitely the place to go on Sunday evenings.

Colonel and Mrs. John B. Atkinson attended the lecture . . . Mrs. Atkinson's grey tweed suit topped with a tricky chapeau of matching felt. Accompanying them were Mr. and Mrs. Frank P. Scully . . . the latter wearing a smart silver fox cape with her tailored black crepe ensemble.

Grey Suit

Mrs. William McDermott, retiring president of the Guild of the Infant Saviour, found the arguments for the co-operative movement "probable but scarcely feasible." With her grey suit, she wore a dark fox cape. Alice Barry and Theodora Day, who are playing a big part in Ace of Clubs fete this season listened attentively to the lecture from the rear of the hall. Alice wore a mink cape with her beige costume while Dora chose black accessories to set off her ensemble of the same tone.

The younger contingent of the organization were on hand to do their bit of chair-moving and ushering. Virginia Hayes selected a dress of vermillion crepe, clipped with rhinestones for her tasks and Ruth Cox's smartly-cut black costume was edged with Persian lamb. Margaret Reid's rust tweed suit was collared with lynx.

It seemed as though Trinity was having a presidents' evening with heads of various clubs represented at the gathering. Among them who is one of her capable aides, were a black and white costume to the evening discussion.

Others in the audience were Mrs. John H. Rooney, Mrs. Edmund P. Butler and Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Driscoll.

One of the most entertaining programs will be the dinner at which new members of the alumnae are to be officially received. Tomorrow evening is the date of the affair and Hotel Westminster is the place.

Newcomers to the alumnae are Mary Finacane of Newton, Catherine McArdle of Lawrence, Catherine McManus of Cambridge and Mary Devine of Belmont, and Mrs. Melvin Dolan of Newton, the former Marjorie Hoy of Milton.

"GIVE ME YOUR HEART"

A NEW SERIAL

By Lewis Allen Browne

A COSMOPOLITAN PRODUCTION RELEASED BY WARNER BROTHERS

CHAPTER 30

"To jilt him would be fatal, wouldn't it, Florence?

"Aren't you getting rather mixed? A woman cannot jilt a man until they have first been lovers."

"Turn him down, then, as you Americans say."

"My opinion, Tubbs, is that getting jilted is like having a tooth pulled—it hurts like the very devil at first, but you are much better off, afterwards."

"So you deal out metaphors and epigrams along with your pills and powders—but no love philtres."

"Say, do you need one?"

"Not at all, Florence, not for myself."

Florence felt a twinge of annoyance. She could feel the blood reddening her cheeks.

"At what hour do we dine?" she asked.

"Eight—" he looked at his watch—"plenty of time yet. If I were right on the dot, Linda would be shocked."

"Bill knows you pretty well, doesn't she?"

"I hope so. Did you explain why she got herself to be called Bill, instead of the more civilized 'Linda'?"

"She said she didn't like the name. Perhaps you could guess."

"I could guess." Tubbs was grave for a moment. "She hopes to bury everything. I forget everything, put it all behind her. That's impossible, and unhealthy, you know. Now here is proof. Linda asked to be called 'Bill.' Very well, her friends do that, but does it help her to forget? On the contrary, every time someone calls her 'Bill,' she knows that she asked it, and she knows why she asked it. Hence, it brings back the very memories she is so foolishly and ineffectively trying to forget."

"Brave, Tubbs—great speech, much logic," Florence cried.

"Meaning the reverse—I should put on cap and bells."

"Not at all, Tubbs." Florence was serious again and put her hand on his arm. "There is gold in them thar hills."

"Meaning what sort of a dig?"

"No dig—meaning that you have a logical mind. Honestly."

"Thanks Florence. Do you mind?" He reached for the bottle again.

"Another bracer? Am I so enervating?"

"No, no!" Not at all—it's thoughts of the nobility."

He poured a small drink and downed it.

"Tubbs, what about the dinner?"

"Oh, nothing. I'm introducing you to a bit of nobility."

"Nobility? Do you mean there will be others beside ourselves and Bill and dim?"

"Two others, Lord and Lady Farrington."

Florence studied him a moment.

"Does, by any chance, Bill know them?"

"I'll say. Linda lived practically next door to them, in England."

"Lord and Lady Farrington—"

Florence Cudahy, hand to forehead, tried to recall whether Linda has ever mentioned these people.

"You say, Tubbs, that Bill lived practically next door to them, in England?"

"That's right."

Health

Caisson's Disease

By ROYAL S. COPELAND, M. D.

RECENTLY I told you about the physical effects of unusual variations in atmospheric pressure. It was pointed out that the change in pressure produced by reaching high altitudes causes marked constitutional disturbances.

Today I want to tell you about the condition which follows the change in air pressure encountered by those who work under sea level.

I refer to the disease known as "Caisson's disease." This is more commonly spoken of by the workmen as the "bends." The symptoms can be traced directly to the abnormal atmospheric pressure in a tunnel under water, or at any depth below sea level. As a rule, the workers carry on their tasks under compressed air. This unnatural state of affairs affects the whole body, including the blood vessels. To put it in a crude way, bubbles of air form in the veins. The heart is placed under heavy strain, and unless speedy relief is obtained, permanent damage may occur.

The victim of Caisson's disease has severe headache, earaches and dizziness. In the acute attack he is seized with severe and intolerable pain in the muscles and joints. He bends over in agony and the pain may actually cause collapse.

Fortunately, for a limited time, exposure does not cause any lasting effects and the symptoms gradually disappear.

Today, modern methods are utilized to adjust the change in atmospheric pressure and the danger of the "bends" has been entirely eliminated. This happy effect is accomplished by the use of special containers which permit regulation of the atmospheric pressure. In these so-called "decompression chambers" the men are able to work without danger of Caisson's disease. They pass from one chamber to another of different pressure, and so on until they find one which is properly adjusted to comfortable working conditions.

Other precautions are taken to prevent any possible damage to the heart and lungs. Likewise, the workmen receive periodic health examinations.

Tweeds to the Congress' Taste

YOU MAY BE sure that the last word in tweeds is spoken when the Fashion Congress jury gives unanimous approval!

Here are the two particularly grand suits which received the black-and-silver tag. They are superb in fabric—soft, firm weave and lovely in color. Tailored to perfection. And designed with a master touch.

Schiaparelli made the original of the three-piece suit above, in a fuchsia-wine tweed with old stone blue in the unusual vest-jacket beneath. The tweed is by Rodier. Spitalfield's silk neckwear material, an English fabric long associated with masculine clothes, makes the ascot, the sleeves and a tuck-in back for the vest! The topping jacket is short, with the flattering curved front line and welted edges. The blue felt hat has height and a dip in the brim that proclaims its newness. Miss Frances Cove models.

More casual and less apt to be an around-the-corner is the hand-loomed Harris tweed. Cream ground, its check is a particularly vital wine-brown. To get technical about it, the brilliance of the color is due to the use of a special vegetable dye. Finely-done detail and a goted skirt are in the tradition of restraint for country wear, leaving the field clear for the handsome fabric to dominate! Golden-yellow tie silk with a wine print is the neckline accent, and wine is repeated in the classic felt hat. Miss Betty Sagendorph models.

The News Is Out

Once a player has called attention to his probable honor holding by doubling a contract, there is no point, and less profit, in attempting to hide this same information in the play.

Far better to resign himself to the fact that the "news is out," and to look around for a more propitious avenue to successful defense.

South had a difficult decision to make over his partner's three no-trump bid—whether to pass or go on toward game in a minor suit. Although a no-trump game would have been extremely easy, South could hardly feel certain of that, and, while I believe that he should have passed.

With a singleton spade, and only one entry to a very broken six-card suit, there were solid grounds for South's dislike of no-trump. West's penalty double had much less to recommend it: he was disclosing a trump situation for the questionable gain of comparatively few points.

North, dealer.
Both sides vulnerable.

	♠ A Q 7 ♡ K Q ◇ K 10 ♣ K Q J 5 4 3
♠ K 6 5 3 ♡ 10 9 7 ◇ A J 8 ♣ A 8 4	North West East South	♠ J 9 4 2 ♡ 6 5 4 2 ◇ 7 6 ♣ 10
	♠ 10 ♡ A 8 2 ◇ Q 9 5 4 3 ♣ 9 7 6

The bidding:

North	East	South	West
1 ♣	Pass	1 ◇	Pass
3 ♣	Pass	3 ◇	Pass
3 NT	Pass	4 ◇	Pass
5 ◇	Pass	Pass	Double
Redouble	Pass	Pass	Pass

West opened the heart ten and groaned inwardly when he saw the K-10 of trumps lying over his A-J-6. (Certainly, this should have been no shock; the bidding strongly indicated at least one diamond honor in North's hand.) Dummy won, and led the Ace and a low spade, declarer ruffing the second. Then a low trump was led up to dummy.

Had West ducked, on the far-fetched hope of preserving both his Ace and Jack as tricks, declarer undoubtedly would have finessed the ten-spot and then laid down the King.

In that event, the defenders would have to be satisfied with the two Aces as their only trick. But West realized that he had strongly indicated the position of the diamond Jack by his double and therefore made no attempt at a bluff "duck."

He went right up with the Ace and instantly ferreted out his one and only chance. Obviously, there was no hope of a heart or a spade trick. The one chance, therefore, was that East could ruff a club.

On this faultless reasoning, West promptly laid down the Ace and a low club, and was rewarded by seeing his partner ruff the latter with his one remaining trump.

Flash Fashion

There are still coppery shades to be found in hosiery, but a great tendency is toward dull colors. For evening because of all the open work slippers, stockings are as nude looking as possible. However, if you crave dark shades there are browns so dark they look black and a black that verges on gunmetal.

"Your Figure, Madame!"

By IDA JEAN KAIN

DO YOU LOVE to eat? With a sweet tooth and a disposition that saves calories, avoirdupois is "natural." An unruffled digestive system that sits square in the middle of your perfect 36, storing every extra calorie, makes it difficult to control the curves. That being the case, you have one of four choices—diet, exercise, dodging calories—and embonpoint!

Dieting is the most direct means of losing weight, but if you reduce on a strict diet the pounds roll back again—so there you are. In the long run, moderate dieting is far better than an occasional hunger strike. It is well to remember that the more rigid the diet, the faster you lose, and the faster you gain it all back.

Exercise increases the oxidation of the fat, since calories are burned on muscular demand. However, there is one big drawback to strenuous exercise for the reducer. It creates a ravenous appetite. You are so hungry you have to eat, and the calories more than offset the exercise. Moderation is the important thing in both diet and exercise, and the combination is more successful than strenuous exercise without dieting, or rigid diet without exercise.

Dodge Calories

You cannot ignore appetite. You must learn to cope with it; so juggle the calories to satisfy the appetite, but dodge the fats and concentrated carbohydrates. The first rule in calorie dodging is, "Don't go hungry." Your overweight is proof that you cannot hold against appetite.

TOTAL CALORIES FOR DAY	1280

There are two ways to satisfy hunger. One is by eating food that give a great deal of bulk for their calorie content. Such foods as fruits and vegetables give a sense of fullness which is a part of the normal satisfaction of hunger. The second plan is always to include a certain amount of food with staying qualities. A normal amount of lean meat, milk and eggs averts the feeling of weakness produced by a poorly balanced diet.

Ida Jean Kain's "Protective Diet Chart" in its application will enable you to select the protective foods and those that regulate and repair. It gives a typical protective diet, shows the 24 base balances and lists the high-calorie foods. For this handy leaflet send a stamped, self-addressed envelope to Miss Kain in care of this paper.

Know Message of Dreams

A DREAM is slipping swiftly through the mind of Mrs. Kent. So commonplace it seems, yet it reveals a hidden discontent with her married life.

She dreams that she and her husband hurry downtown to see a parade. They are two hours too early and have to wait and wait. When the parade passes, only a small crowd has gathered. They needn't have come so early.

Mrs. Kent's friend, Alice, and her fiance, Jack, arrive just as the parade goes by.

"You didn't miss a thing by so getting here early," says Mrs. Kent in her dream.

The meaning? Very plain, if you understand the queer sign language of dreams. Mrs. Kent married very young. Alice, the same age, married years later and made a better match than Mrs. Kent. Mrs. Kent feels that she needn't have been in such haste to wed, that Alice has been wise not to "get there early."

There's the clue to reading dreams. They tell in symbols, in stories like fables, what our unconscious mind really thinks. What we can't accomplish in reality we often accomplish in our dreams.

Get hints about the real you, about your suppressed worries and hopes, in our 40-page booklet, "Interpreting Your Dreams." Written by a noted psychiatrist. Rely on science, not on superstition. Learn to tell important dreams from meaningless ones.

Send 15c for our booklet, "Interpreting Your Dreams," to Boston Evening American Home Institute, 109 West 19th street, New York, N. Y. Write plainly your name, address, and the name of booklet.

ADVICE on LOVE and MARRIAGE -:- By Beatrice Fairfax

Are Most Girls Deluded Who Believe Their Bosses Love Them?

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

Playwrights, novelists, short-story writers might rise and give a bow to Professor Harold Smith of Boston University, for his definition of the "perfect secretary."

You may or may not agree with his declaration that the perfect secretary is one who would quit her job when she found herself falling in love with her boss, "because either the job or the love affair would suffer, and naturally it would be the job."

But it's amazing how many angles of human behavior have been turned up by this question. Comedies, tear-jerking comedies, heart — searching tragedies, and no two of them alike—all of it human nature in the raw.

The situation is strictly modern —up-to-the-minute—white peroxide, and one which might have caused Mrs. Grundy, of Queen Victoria's day, to swoon.

Whoever dreamed of the term "Office Wife" in the busy little clicking typewriter invaded the stenographer? And now it's taken for granted.

WIVES NOT DISTURBED

The "Office Wife" may be a lady of mature years and grim visage—again, she may be young and lovely. The term no longer upsets the legal wife.

Today's belief is: "Just a girl who calls herself an 'adviser' at the office, a confidante, and she buy some juicy compliments to make it the following:

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

The girl whose letter appeared in your column the other day, telling that the boss' wife had a voice which resembled that of a buzz saw, when she left messages for her husband to come home in time to eat, and their every dining out made me think of a youngster caught pilfering.

You've seen the kid who has stolen a juicy red apple, and then sticks her fingers out with a shrill cackle, as a refuge for her pride. But thanks to modern psychology, the kid doesn't feel that way. We know the kind of girl who wrote that letter; we've had to work with her, and against such another girls in our daily lives.

They take the easiest way, and after a year or two you're apt to find them on the scrap-heap.

The fact that your self-styled responsible rebels so emphatically against the boss' wife shows that the situation is gall-like, and that the applesauce that she has stolen do does not taste as good as she expected.

A SENSIBLE GIRL

Much as the storybook boss stuff is Cinderella sentiment, Girls delude themselves into imagining the boss as Prince Charming in disguise, and then they think the boss loves only his faithful little secretary. Perhaps the deluded girl believes in Santa Claus, too, and goes to a routine toilet at 10 per cross to be found at a tall, dark man is thinking of her constantly.

You are I am not a wife, but not another working girl who has grabbed off moderate success by sticking to her job. I have never had to make up to the boss to get a raise. I let them know I am worth the remuneration, and nothing more, nothing less, in business, too.

Occasionally, I remember the type your letter described most vividly, but I can handle them, for I'm from the wide open spaces where women are women.

AN ONLOOKER

Perhaps you may not be a lead-ing lady in a second-hand drama, but merely an onlooker, like this correspondent. If your letter aroused interest as pithy we'll be glad to publish them.

Who's next?

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

What confidence can be put in a man who promises to marry and constantly fails? We have been married seven years and have three children. My husband spends all of his money on another woman, comes home intoxicated and is brutal and abusive.

Yet, when I threaten to leave, he cries like a baby and begs me to stay. He says that may again, but still he goes back to this woman and spends his money on her. He has been home for only 24 hours to refrigerator. Removes from mattress, floor and brown everything in muted shading. Allow the onions to brown with the meat. Turn the fire very low. Add the liquid in which the meat stood over night cover closely, and cook very slowly until tender. Thicken the gravy if desired. Serve with boiled potatoes and broccoli.

SPICED POT ROAST

1½ cups cider
1 tablespoon brown sugar
1 teaspoon cinnamon
½ teaspoon ginger
2 cloves

Make this marinade and pour over a 3 to 4-pound chuck pot roast allowing it to stand for 24 hours in the refrigerator. Remove from the marinade and brown in hot fat. Turn the fire low, add the marinade in the pan, cover closely and allow to simmer for three hours. Thicken gravy if desired. Serve with boiled noodles and white boiled onions.

Martha Lee

Marinated Pot Roast

FROM MATHA LEE'S MONDAY MORNING BROADCAST OVER STATION WMEX

THAT GOOD old favorite pot roast can be made into an entirely new and enticing treat by marinating it before cooking.

The trick of marinating a pot roast comes to us from our foreign neighbors. Sauerbraten is the typical German pot roast, marinated in vinegar and cooked with plenty of onions and seasonings. Other nations have similar characteristic roasts.

A marinade is seasoned liquid, poured over raw meat and allowed to stand for 24 hours before cooking. does two distinct things to its quality. First and foremost, it gives the meat a new flavor, more pronounced, more elusive and far more interesting than the plain meat flavor. But beyond that it helps to a marked degree to make a less tender cut of meat into a delicously tender product. The acid of the marinade is responsible for this tenderizing effe.

Almost any combination at flavors may be used in the marinade so long as an acid is the foundation. Either vinegar, well seasoned with onion, garlic and bay leaves makes one excellent flavor combination. Tomato juice highly seasoned with celery, pepper, celery, salt, Worcestershire sauce or Tabasco sauce makes an entirely new flavor, yet, does the same job of tenderizing as the vinegar.

A new flavor combination with beef in that of cider and spices, the combination so often connected in our thoughts with ham. Two or three whole cloves, a quarter teaspoon of cinnamon and a pinch added to the cider gives just the right emphasis to the cooked meat.

About two cups of liquid will cover an average sized pot roast if put into a small enough pot to avoid extra space. Choose a mixing bowl or glass baking pan, fit the meat into it and pour the marinade over it until it just covers the meat. Place in the refrigerator over night.

Some of the marinades tend to change the raw meat color somewhat, but will not affect the color of the cooked roast.

After 24 hours soaking, remove the meat, brown it as usual, then pour the marinade from which the browned roast, cover closely and simmer over a low fire for three hours or until tender. Flouring the roast before browning it helps to thicken the gravy around the meat. Delicious in flavor character, the gravies result from the different marinades and should be served over plain boiled or baked potatoes.

VINEGAR MARINATED POT ROAST

1 cup vinegar
1 cup water
2 teaspoons sugar
2 teaspoons salt
½ teaspoon pepper
2 cloves
4 bay leaves
½ teaspoon dry mustard
1 whole onion
1 bud garlic

Fill a 3 to 4-pound chuck roast into a crockery or enamel pot which will leave only a minimum space around the meat. Mix the marinade and pour over the meat, covering it completely. Add the bay leaves and sliced onion and garlic. Let stand in the refrigerator for 24 hours to refrigerator. Remove from marinade, flour and brown thoroughly in heated shortening. Allow the onions to brown with the meat. Turn the fire very low. Add the liquid in which the meat stood over night cover closely, and cook very slowly until tender. Thicken the gravy if desired. Serve with boiled potatoes and broccoli.

Complete List of Toilet Articles Necessary for Smart Collegians

By DONNA GRACE

ABOUT this time every year many of our pretty girl graduates of last spring are leaving home to attend college or finishing school. Few young persons of this age have ever left a home for any length of time by themselves, and are quite likely to be bewildered with all the responsibility they are obliged to assume.

The task of providing a school outfit and the necessary equipment belongs to the parents or guardians, but there are some things every smart girl will look after herself.

Being an educated miss, she knows the importance of making a good first impression on her new associates at school. That first impression will be the medium of her rating or importance among her new acquaintances, and it is usually a lasting impression.

NEATNESS AND GOOD TASTE

We believe the very best passport any young person can have for her introduction and identification is neatness and immaculate cleanliness. There is no substitute for these qualifications, and they are within the reach of every one.

A toilet outfit of some kind is necessary, but it need not be expensive or elaborate. There are many inexpensive fitted boxes, but for practical purposes, it may be advisable to purchase a pure soap, washcloths, astringents and the necessary creams in their original package or in larger quantities. These are the essential things, and then the make-up may be had in small quantities.

A comb and brush, as well as the little curlers, should be part of the equipment, and a plain manicure outfit is also necessary.

USE LITTLE MAKE-UP

Do not make the mistake of wearing too much make-up the first day, even if you know just how to apply it to the best advantage.

* * *

I have a complete list of all the toilet articles, and make-up necessary for the college term. Besides the essential things, it will give you the instruction for evening and formal make-up. I will be glad to send you the complete list without charge, if you will write for it. Be sure to enclose a stamped, self-addressed envelope for your reply and address Donna Grace, Beauty Editor of this paper.

Married Comrades -:- By Adele Garrison

CHAPTER 116

"THERE'S NO use in beating about the well known bush," Dicky said in answer to my assertion that he thought Noel was in definite danger. "I told you that I thought the capering cockroach had acquired some cobra venom somewhere.

He delivered his sentence with a tantalizing grin, but I gave a little shiver. With memories of Jack Leslie's past performances scurrying through my brain, even Dicky's nonsense could not stir my laughter muscles.

A husband shot a quick, keen glance at me and then with a smothered oath, he took me roughly but tenderly into his arms.

"Quit it," he ordered.

"Quit what?" I parried, knowing very well what he meant but with a feline—and feminine—liking for basking in loving care.

"Quit shaking," he said peremptorily. "Because I admit that Noel is in probable danger from Jack . . . ill—if this mysterious stranger be Jack Leslie, which hasn't been proved yet—that doesn't mean that the peril is going to culminate in even mild disaster. I told y. i that I'r going to get on the job at once, and as a getter-on-a-job, while I'm not in old Hugh's class, I admit, yet I modestly think I run a nifty second.

"You know you're not second; there's no one who can do this better or even as well as you," I said.

"Can the compliments," he said, "and save your worry for somebody who needs it. If I can't swing the Leslie inset by one of his legs with one hand and have the other free for purposeful punches upon different portions of his anatomy, I'll melt down my boxing cup and have it made up into crochet needles. Now laugh, darn you. That's supposed to be funny."

I saw that he was trying hard to get me out of my anxious mood, and I managed a smile with difficulty.

"That's better," he said. "Now is there anything else on the old bean?"

"Only this," I said. "Can you leave here in these first days of my father's absence before his twin brother comes to impersonate him?"

"Why not?" he countered. "As I understand it, Dad's going to be low at his destination until his brother arrives, and there'll be nothing to do here."

MADGE IS RELIEVED

"There certainly will be shock troops enough around the place with you all on the job. I never will be missed, and I'll devote all the time I can spa. e from my orders to the welfare of Noel.

"And if I find it necessary, I shan't hesitate to yank old Phil Verrizen by his collar and the seat of his trousers out of his easiest chair, and get his insect exterminating Inrra into action. So you see there isn't a single thing for you to worry about."

"I don't believe there is," I said with a distinct mounting of my spirits. "If I needed proof of your prowess, which I don't, the faces of the boys when they came in just now with you would be enough. They are gleeful and enthusiastic. Despite the fact that you persuaded them into leaving every toy and pet behind save Scott."

"Persuaded' isn't the right word," he said with a twinkle in his eyes. "Plenaged is much nearer. But I thank you for the compliment. Now is there anything on your mind before I go and arrange for the picketing of the farmhouse until after you are gone in the morning?"

4 FELLOWSHIPS IN RESEARCH

The award of four research fellowships carrying a total stipend of $3800, was announced by Harvard University this morning.

Lynn Pair Feted on 50th Anniversary

Mr. and Mrs. Amos R. Sanborn, residents of the East Lynn section, celebrated their 50th wedding anniversary at their home, 60 Timson street.

They were married at the Washington street Baptist church, October 3, 1886, by Rev. B. A. Greene.

One of the pleasures of the celebration was their having as house guest Mrs. C. W. Andrews, of Waltham, a bridesmaid at the half-century ago ceremony. Mrs. Sanborn was the former Miss May Gills.

Although Mr. Sanborn has been retired from active business for several years, both he and Mrs. Sanborn are in excellent health, spending the summer months on their 80-acre farm in New Hampshire.

JUNIOR BIRDMEN OF AMERICA

DEVOTED TO THE INTEREST OF THE YOUTH OF THE AMERICAS IN AVIATION

TODAY'S PILOTS OF MODELS —TOMORROW'S MODEL PILOTS!

While model plane construction and flying are attracting Junior Birdmen of the Boston American wing during their recreation hours, new academic studies are engaging their attention during school and college periods.

Virtually all of the prominent Junior Birdmen are taking advanced courses this year in school, high school and colleges over those of last year.

Herbert K. Weiss of Lawrence, is now a senior in the aeronautical engineering department at M. I. T. Weiss often serves as chief inspector at wing model plane tournaments.

Torrey L. Cape, Quincy, 1934 outdoor champion of the wing, and Bruno P. Marchi, Medford, 1934 indoor champion, whose age of 21 makes him no longer eligible for competitions, are studying aeronautical engineering at Boston University. Everett Tasker, Medford, also 21 now, is taking a business course at the same university.

John Jacobs, Everett, former commander of the Leaping Lenas and now a member of the MAC squadron is working during the daytime and taking a business administration course at Boston University at night.

Jack Bronski, Everett, commander of the WMAC unit, is a junior at Everett High school while Eugene Blevins, an expert in scale model construction, is a senior there.

Leslie C. "Craig" Woodman, also a former commander of the Leaping Lenas, and usually a threat in model flying competitions, graduated from Everett High and is now installing oil burners.

Frank A. Barrett, Jr., Brighton, 1935 and 1936 outdoor champion, and "Bill" Mazz are attending Mechanics Art High school. Frank is a senior and "Bill" a junior. Glenn O'Keak is also attending Mechanics Art.

SENSIBLE DIET FOR FAT FOLKS

A Fat Life Is Often A Short One Statistics Show

Too much fat puts too much work on any heart—the heart is apt to break down under the strain. Sensible dietitians constantly warn overweight people to reduce but make sure you use a safe, sane method. The following has been proven steadily successful:

Cut down on fat meats, butter, cream and sugary sweets. Eat more fruit and vegetables.

Take a half teaspoonful of Kruschen Salts in a glass of hot water first thing every morning in a glass of hot water for proper elimination. Kruschen helps keep the system free from harmful excess wastes and poisons—gently sweeps them from both UPPER and LOWER bowel without purging or harsh cathartics—insures blissful daily bowel action.

A jar of Kruschen lasts for weeks and costs but a few cents. So start today and reduce—live longer—be healthier, happier, full of the joy of living.

If Mothers Only Knew

Signs of Round Worms are: — Constipation, deranged stomach, swollen upper lip, offensive breath, hard and full stomach with pains, pale face, eyes heavy, short dry cough, grinding of the teeth, etc.

Mrs. E. W. Stephan, 31 Kenberma Road, Dorchester, Mass., wrote: "My little girl's freedom from children's diseases, colds, constipation, etc., I attribute in a large degree to the use of Dr. True's Elixir."

7 REASONS WHY Puck—The Comic Weekly is a logical Basic Advertising Medium

1 The Broadest Base in Advertising. Puck—The Comic Weekly provides the broadest single base upon which to build a comprehensive national advertising program—nearly six million families—more than 20,000,000 potential readers. Puck—The Comic Weekly comes nearest to being America's all-sufficient advertising medium.

2 Medium-in-Motion. It does more than merely expose advertisements to this vast audience—it presents them in an environment which makes reading inevitable.

3 The Largest Single-Medium Whole-Family Circulation. Besides the normal adult readership in nearly six million homes, Puck—The Comic Weekly has more than eight million juvenile readers, several hundred thousand of whom will become heads of families each year.

4 Low Cost Per Family Reached. A big 4-color page (14⅜" x 19¾"), 2½ times the size of the standard national weekly magazine page, costs only 3 mills per family. This rate is low for Puck—The Comic Weekly's adult circulation alone, without considering the millions of juveniles who constitute a continuous circulation bonus.

5 Concentration in Best Buying Areas. Puck—The Comic Weekly reaches an average of 42.4% of all families in 627 out of the 995 key cities of 10,000 or more population. In these 995 key cities 70% of all the nation's retail sales are made.

6 One Policy—One Make-Up. Puck—The Comic Weekly is one publication—not seventeen. It has one editorial policy—one cast of characters—one make-up—one quality of printing.

7 Maximum Visibility—Minimum Competition. Each advertisement in Puck—The Comic Weekly receives spotlight position—the number of advertisements per issue is limited, thus assuring each advertiser maximum attention.

FOURTEEN STARS on a single advertising program may be a startling thought to some advertisers but not to nearly twenty million men, women and children, to whom such a program is a weekly event. For in Puck—The Comic Weekly there is such an All-Star Cast—unparalleled in the entertainment field.

The stars which make up this All-Star Cast are none other than Jiggs & Maggie, Popeye, Tillie, Skippy, the Katzenjammer Kids, Flash Gordon, Barney Google, Toots & Casper, the Little King and Company—the original and only All-Star Cast in "comics".

Every Sunday this All-Star Cast entertains the entire household—young and old alike—in nearly six million homes. It entertains them when they want to be entertained, for the All-Star Cast is available at any hour of the day. It is a live show until the last person in the household has absorbed it.

Members of the All-Star Cast have portrayed the basic themes of life, literature and drama—laughs, loves, thrills and tears—so humanly that they have held the interest of the nation for three generations. This is the longest run ever known in the entire field of entertainment.

Full page advertisers in Puck—The Comic Weekly are capturing this lively interest developed editorially by the All-Star Cast. These experienced advertisers are successfully using the same editorial technique to sell their products to this responsive family audience.

Remember, it's the cast that makes the comics. The one and only All-Star Cast is in Puck—The Comic Weekly. It's your surest guarantee of star pulling power.

We would welcome the opportunity to show you what the All-Star Cast has done for other advertisers. Please phone COlumbus 5-2642 New York or Superior 6820 Chicago.

Yankee Triumph In Battle—or Aspirin Eating

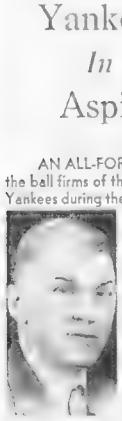
New York, Oct. 5.

AN ALL-FOR-GLORY spirit prevailed between the ball firms of the New York Giants and New York Yankees during the Sabbath game of this world baseball serial, which now stands 3 to 1 for the newspaper favorite, with a strong likelihood that the final contest will be jelled into cold type by nightfall!



Austen Lake

[illegible] Yankee pitchers [illegible] Giant batters [illegible] Jake Ruppert's big [illegible] game. And [illegible] pitchers, [illegible] Pearson, [illegible]

But both pitchers offered their bodies, as the war citations love to read "with selfless abandon and pure disregard for personal security," being somewhat prompted, too, by thou, bits of the winner's end of the players' purse.

WATSON AND THE NEEDLE

HUBBELL TOOK NOTHING for his affliction except a little hot goose-grease, ether and alcohol by the club house trainer, rubbed into his arm. But Pearson accepted a syringeful of pain killer which was squirted under the skin near his back doors in the hope that would quiet his [illegible] for the duration of the game. This was not [illegible] in the same sense of "dynamiting" Monte to greater [illegible] but more on an opiate administered on the same [illegible] as when a spavined race nag's hocks are frozen [illegible] of novocaine just before [illegible] post.

KEY LACKS HIS POWER

HUBBELL, AS THE GIANT key pitcher who before yesterday's game was expected to put the series back to even [illegible] for [illegible], a ghost of his normal stuff and that his pitching hand felt numb and wooden, due, he [illegible] to the extra exhaustion he had experienced in Wednesday's [illegible] game. As [illegible] won that game, he [illegible] and [illegible] batters and left him with only a feeble spark for Sunday.

TERRY GETS THE BLAME

THERE WERE MANY, in the little hotel lobby clinics who thought Terry's major tactical blunder in this series came in yesterday's third inning, when Rolfe was on first and Gehrig at the plate. There was one out when Hubbell [illegible] a wild pitch that let Rolfe go to third and brought the count to three balls and one strike on the Gehrig.

Here, say the lobby voices, Terry should have passed Lou and hopefully arranged his infield for a double kill [illegible]. Instead, Hubbell, in a hole, served up a fat pitch, which Lou promptly tagged into the right field bleachers. In his own defense Terry says he [illegible] suggested a deliberate pass to Hubbell, who rejected it, saying he preferred to strike out on a couple of screw balls. "Quick" Terry added dolefully, "the ball didn't screw" to which Gehrig himself testifies that it came up innocent of any twist deception or, shoulder high and within reach of the fat of his bat. "Perfect for pick-up," he said.

PEARSON FEAR ROUTED BY DICKEY

By FRED C. LANE

New York, Oct 5—"Monte Pearson pitched what I consider the best game of his career against these Giants. He had speed to burn and his hook was working like a clock," Catcher Bill Dickey told me.

I figured he had the stuff to stop Terry's boys and assured him. But Monte is a skeptic, and I know he doubted what I said.

"I have been in this game long enough to know that a player ailing or down is under a mental strain that is hard to overcome, so I thought I'd used . . . what you call it . . . psychology, that's it, on him.

Monte has been fighting himself much of the season. He was under a mental hazard that something ailed his arm. He felt the condition wasn't clearing up as it should. Everything that keeps a ball player down was saddled on his shoulders.

You remember he fanned Bartell and Terry in the first inning? Well, here's where the psychology comes in.

"The ball was making an exceptionally loud thud in my glove during the first inning. It couldn't be heard where you fellows sat because of the cheering. But Pearson must of noticed it.

Bears Down

"On returning to the bench he asked me for a reason. 'You sure got it today,' I told him. He doubted me, I know. I sent Doc Painter into the clubhouse for a small sponge that catchers often use when their hand becomes tender from long drilling and made it a point that Pearson saw me insert it in the mitt.

"In the second inning he sure was bearing down. He struck out Ott and Mancuso and each time I held the glove in such a manner as to make the reports from the gloves as loud as possible.

"Boys, that did the trick.

"From then on it was just a coast with Gehrig hitting that home run for good measure.

"I think he was as his best in the eighth inning when Leslie hitting for Hubbell, singled and Moore did the same thing. I walked out of the box and told him to steady down his pace. He was too anxious and pitching too fast.

"Well, the rest is history. Bartell and Terry both were thrown out by Lazzeri and Ott was the only man in the way. We worked the count down to three and two and I am sure I crossed Mel up when I called for an outside curve. I'm sure he was looking for that fast one down the alley.

"He just topped the ball and was easy for Rolfe.

"That's my story boys, and I'll stick to it, was the parting shot of the huge receiver who had by this time finished dressing and was ready to meet the hoards of autograph seekers who mill about the gate after every game.

Lou Gehrig has perhaps found a sure cure for lambago. He should patent the idea and retire from baseball with a million but to a few he let the secret out.

When asked by a newsman how he continues to hit home runs and swing on fierce and terrific from lumbago he cried aloud he was dopen up.

Giants Quiet

The remark, if taken serious would cause an investigation or so was true by Judge Landis on the iron horse but Lou has been a-ing aspirin tablets in large doses. That is the secret he gave to the world.

"Start Packing" was the command to his mates waiting for the crowd to leave the huge stadium before making their exit.

"This series is as good as in Schumacher is no puzzle if Bill shoots him today and I think that's all he has left. We stopped him in the third inning of the second game and will make it stop today."

The Giants' dug-out was a quiet one. Northern Manhattan or a quiet city. Not a comment, said everywhere and all waiting, one of the Terry, to let matters rest.

It is doubtful if the Giants thought they ever had a chance to win this series. They know the Yankees are a great ball club and have proved it in backing at and forth. It is worth his weight in gold as center.

Series

Attendance Top Smashed Again

New York, Oct 5—The World Series attendance record was broken in the fourth game of the series as 86,860 persons paid $356,294 to see the Yankees beat the Giants, 5 to 2.

The players' share was $122,704.41, bringing their pool for the four games to $471,737.18, another high mark.

The commissioner's share was $36,088.85, and the contending clubs split $81,896.94 with the two major leagues.

Obsolete Pass Defense Perils B. C. Team

Having come through their opening assignment in a most auspicious fashion in defeating Kutsher's Hotel Catskill Eleven, Ed Doble's Boston College Eagles opened practice today for their approaching Columbus Day game with Dartmouth's Team, Oak, with a brisk drill at the Heights this afternoon.

Pass defense, which was practically a non-existent part of the football exhibited by the powerful B. C. eleven on Saturday, will be stressed extensively by the coaching staff during the intervening time before Temple.

Showing bewildered weakness when attacked by the Catskill aerial attack, the Eagles, who were rated among the best in the East, proved so vulnerable by the Huskies, that the Eagles are in for a drubbing from Temple next week.

The Boston College line, through which the N. U. backs were able to [illegible] seven yards at a time, seemed to be the weakest part of the Eagle eleven and [illegible] Coach Doble had predicted, what with no time in order for the [illegible] was known [illegible] was particularly outstanding. Hanover, N. H. Oct. 5—It's an old Army custom for rookies to be retained in the awkward squad until such a time as they have mastered a complete and through knowledge of regulations.

So, the sophomores on the Dartmouth varsity squad are in the care of Commander-in-Chief Earl Peck and his aides buck

Like the army recruits who get the works, the extent of going from guard to old guard to K. P. for weeks without a break, the aggregation of pigskin chasers who came up from the scrimmage this fall with one or two exceptions, are still quarterred in the third eleven barracks.

Eagle Team Packs Potential Power

By L. B. "PAT" HANLEY

The first big New England college football Saturday is over and the headaches are surprisingly few. These unexpected early season upsets which have become so common were strangely missing.

Harvard, Dartmouth and Yale all came through in nice shape although I did not think that the Bul would run up 25 points on Cornell.

Here in Boston, Gil Dobie's first Boston College eleven made its [illegible] debut against Northeastern and although the Huskies offered a stubborn [illegible]

Speaking frankly, one of my scouts was in the stands and he tells me that Boston College has loads of power and with a little more work these lads of Dobie are going to give their big rivals plenty to think about.

The only game that can be figured as an upset here in New England is Wesleyan's victory over Connecticut State. The Staters, by virtue of their brilliant upset win over Brown the week before, figured to be too strong for their Connecticut rivals—but it is the unexpected that makes football what it is.

Dr. Eddie Anderson has a powerful squad with plenty of football [illegible] Whether they can actually go on defeated is a question though for [illegible] Carnegie Tech, Manhattan, Dartmouth and Boston College ahead and any one of these five schools can upset the season.

LEWIS HANEY ON STOCKS

Higher Prices
SEEM IN STORE
For Good Stocks

By LEWIS HANEY
(Professor of Economics, New York University)

New York, Oct. 5—The stock market averages turned around and showed good gains last week. At the end, prices averaged between 1½ and 2 points higher than at the beginning. Bonds also rose, making new average highs for the year.

On Saturday 99 stocks made new highs. The groups of stocks that were most represented were motors, steels, railway equipments, coppers and stores. The railway group also broke through the previous high of this bull market.

The chief laggards on this move have been the utilities, rail stocks, dairy stocks, gold mines and some of the earlier speculative favorites that were over-bulled.

The story was told on Thursday, when once more it became apparent that there was no pressure of liquidation. Selling dried up. The market would not go down.

Evidently, it is still harder to put stocks down than it is to put them up.

This story is not new, but it had to be repeated because of the ill-founded fear that the so-called devaluation of the franc would be a strong bearish factor. With the passing of this fear one of the hurdles in the way of the bull market was negotiated. Actually, Europeans have apparently bought on balance.

Short covering by the short-sighted bears was an important factor. Many who have been waiting "on the sidelines" re-entered the market.

Thus, another "dip" has been stopped at a level above its predecessor and the rising trend of the line drawn through the "bottoms" of the market moves is more firmly established than ever.

Furthermore, the averages have mostly broken through the upper resistance level of the recent trading range.

Can it be said, then, that they have "broken" out of the triangle which I mentioned last week? If so is it a definite signal?

From the intermediate or long-pull standpoint, I am inclined to think so. I would, therefore, consider it well for any who bought carefully selected stocks on the basis of earnings, and did so "on the dip," as advised, to hold them.

At a guess, I would say that the speculative trader who wants "a good gamble" may make a point or two more on the bull side of this move.

From the trading standpoint, however, there are indications that this particular move is a good rally which may not get up enough momentum to carry through for any long, steady climb. While, therefore, higher prices seem probable right here, I would follow up only with much caution.

In the first place, the political uncertainty factor is likely to come to the front in a week or two. Last week, Al Smith's swing to Landon and Roosevelt's speech (with the charge of Communism) strengthened the hopes of defeating the New Deal.

The final vote, however, is likely to be too close to allow the threat of the New Deal to be dismissed so lightly. Some revulsion of sentiment is likely to chill the market between now and mid-October.

In the second place, the market letter writers are 60 per cent bullish, and "the public" is probably coming in again. In due time, this development may be expected to weaken the technical position. There is a probable reaction would come.

But (1) inflationary factors are so strong, and (2) so many of the medium and large traders are cautious and afraid, that I doubt that any reaction would be very severe. It might be stopped at the 165 level for the Dow Jones industrials, while a sharp shake out to about 160 would be the limit.

One should note that this bull market has been built upon government credit in the shape of bank deposits. It is not financed through loans to brokers or others. In general, therefore, the rise should continue as long as deposits rise and until loans catch up with them.

Of course, this assumes that individuals will be allowed to make profits, and that Communism will not be allowed to dominate America.

I am bullish on this score. Therefore, I expect higher prices for many deserving stocks.

SURPLUS Tax VIEWED
FERGUSON HITS AT ROOSEVELT

By MERRYLE STANLEY RUKEYSER

Los Angeles, Oct. 5 (US)—As part of national planning, the new federal punitive undivided profits tax is forcing directing heads of American corporations to substitute other factors than business prudence in determining what proportion of profits to pay out in dividends.

This can be plainly seen in current dividend declarations in all parts of the country.

The reserve measure has been defended as a protective device against the habit of keeping funds idle in corporate treasuries. If the motive were to put more purchasing power at work, there would be more direct ways of achieving such an objective. Even such an amendment, though better than the existing arrangement, would still be a bureaucratic interference with business management.

Referring to the practical significance of this new tax legislation on employment prospects, H. K. Ferguson, head of the Cleveland (O.) industrial engineering firm which bears his name, in a message to this column, points out:

"It would be very helpful if corporation taxes on undistributed surplus could be cancelled, or so arranged as to apply to surplus funds not distributed to shareholders, or PUT INTO NEW PLANT AND EQUIPMENT. This provision would provide a splendid stimulus to employment in industrial construction and equipment, relieving relief expenditures."

Translating this tax dilemma into the practical significance to his own enterprise, Mr. Ferguson explains:

"It is becoming increasingly difficult for me to understand how the President's corporation taxation plan can be helpful to the small company which has come through the depression with some indebtedness and is now subject to all taxes which are imposed upon it in its efforts to earn enough money to pay its debts, build up its surplus against depression, and pay reasonable salaries to its officers and men in the meantime.

"During the last depression, I was able, because of surplus built up during previous good years, to carry most of our organization during the first three years of the depression without serious layoff of men.

"There will certainly be no such opportunity next time as the basis of any surplus to be accumulated under present tax requirements."

MOVE To Liquidate RFC
INITIAL STEP TAKEN

Universal Service

Washington, Oct. 5 (US)—The initial step toward ultimate liquidation of the $10,000,000,000 Reconstruction Finance Corporation was taken today in an announcement encouraging banks to speed up retirement of their obligations to the lending agency.

Reversing a policy laid down last December designed to discourage hasty retirement by banks of nearly a billion dollars in preferred stock sold the corporation to build up their capital stock, Chairman Jesse H. Jones, announced:

"Effective October 1, 1936, the interest and dividend rate on preferred stock, capital notes and debentures will be reduced to three per cent to those banks that make their payments promptly on or before the maturities fixed in the articles of association and the capital notes and debentures, and that increase the annual retirement of their reconstruction finance capital as much as one per cent per annum over requirements.

"The savings from the reduction in rate will be treated as a part of the retirement fund. Amortization and retirement payments may be made in cash or by surrender of preferred securities at par and accrued interest."

This announcement means that the interest rate on preferred stock is being cut from 4 to 3 per cent provided the banks pay annual amortization installments promptly, retire the stock before it matures, or increase their annual payments toward retirement over one per cent.

Under the articles of association the banks were given twenty years to amortize the preferred stock, capital notes and debentures sold to the Reconstruction Corporation to build up this capital.

At one time the Reconstruction Finance Corporation owned more than $700,000,000 of preferred stock in thousands of the nation's banks.

During the past 12 months, however, many banks have retired more than $300,000,000 in preferred stock, or have induced private investors to take over Reconstruction holdings.

The total retired the corporation's preferred bank stock holdings to $672,000,000.

These and other repayments have resulted in big collections by the corporation over and in excess of new funds advanced. Repayments for the first quarter alone over outgo have approximated $225,000,000.

Third Quarter Bank Earnings

First reports of local bank earnings for the third quarter just ended present quite a mixed showing. The statements disclose that most institutions did somewhat better in the matter of operating profits than for any previous three months' period this year. Public National had indicated earnings of $1.09 a share for the past three months against 96 cents the June period and 61 cents a share the third quarter last year. Chemical Bank & Trust, on the other hand, revealed indicated earnings of 43 cents a share against 95 cents the June quarter and 89 cents a year ago. Commercial National net was equal to $3.08 a share against $2.08 a share last year.

Radiator Helped By Building Rise

Stockholders of American Radiator & Standard Sanitary Corp. were greatly cheered yesterday by receipt of the first dividend check on their holdings since early 1932 and an optimistic message from the chairman of the board. He stated a resumption of building activity on a moderate scale has influenced an encouraging increase in the volume of sales and profits. The increase in residential construction, he added, has raised the potential demand for the company's products the past eight months from 11 per cent of normal to 25 per cent. The executive also noted a change in the mortgage market since the first of the year and discloses that banks and other institutions are now offering loans at favorable rates of interest.

C. & O. Loadings Up 155 P. C., But—

Railroad experts who follow freight loadings rubbed their eyes and looked twice when Chesapeake & Ohio for last week reported a jump of nearly 155 per cent in freight volume, compared with a year ago. The road's loadings for the week ended last Saturday totaled 37,994 cars, against 14,915 in the like 1935 week. Investigation revealed, however, that the big jump over last year was caused by an abrupt falling off in freight at this time last year, due to labor trouble at the coal mines in the territory served by the road. Nevertheless, C. & O. freight, which is 80 per cent soft coal movement, is showing substantial, regular gains. Last week's 37,994-car total was 1154 cars above the preceding week. Last month's loadings were around 27 per cent over last year. For the year to date, loadings are better than 16 per cent above the like 1935 period. C. & O. in the first eight 1936 months earned $3.25 a common share, against $2.31 in the like period of 1935.

See Transamerica Dividend Boost

Expectation that Transamerica Corp. will boost the rate of dividends later this year is voiced in usually well-informed quarters. Such action would be in line with the bullish viewpoint in some quarters regarding the outlook for bank earnings. Pivotal point on which anticipated improvement rests is the expanding total of commercial bank loans and rising clearing house receipts.

U. S., FOREIGN
Climbing To New Levels

With Europe suffering the worst case of war jitters in years, steel production is climbing to new levels.

Certain countries are wrecking their budgets and piling up enormous debts in the mad race to rearm.

Even at the bottom of the depression in 1932, steel mills in Japan, Soviet Russia, Sweden and India were running at a high rate of capacity operation.

Of the nine countries shown on the chart, only the United States and France are below the 1929 level of production. The high rate of steel production abroad does not necessarily indicate that Europe is prospering.

The steel that is being turned out is in large part for non-constructive purposes. That is, it is not being used to develop or improve the economic life of European countries; rather it is intended for destructive purposes which inevitably results in economic disaster.

Beware of the above chart, "Business Week."

Washington Notebook

Washington, Oct. 5 (AP)—The Bureau of Air Commerce reports that scheduled air lines carried 106,142 passengers in August compared with 111,072 in July and 93,581 in August, 1935. . . Miles flown by air lines last August totaled 6,046,421 and express carried aggregated 565,358 pounds.

Census bureau statistics show that sales of paint, varnish, lacquer and fillers by 579 establishments in August totaled $33,380,000, compared with $33,919,000 in July and $28,501,654 in August a year ago.

The Commerce Department reports that Italian exports to its East African colonies "are fairly active" and that "a considerable volume of sales" is pending. Coffee and skins is appearing in the Italian market . . . Tourist traffic, the department says, has increased substantially this summer, with hotels and resorts doing the best business in five years.

Other business advices to the Commerce Department from representatives in foreign countries: England—Slum clearance program makes "appreciable progress." Italy—Extensive program of railroad electrification planned. U. S. government. Germany—Wages in chemical industry continue at depression levels. British Malaya—Pineapple pack for current year largest on record. Belgium—Commercial and industrial volume in August considered "most satisfactory."

B. C. FORBES

Business Is UNEXCITED AS Vote Nears

By B. C. FORBES

Although what is universally regarded as a momentous election to determine how our government will be administered during the coming four years is only one month away, trade, industry, securities are moving along unexcitedly and, on the whole, satisfactorily. The stock market closed the week quite buoyantly.

A growing number of men of affairs are veering towards the conclusion that the rising economic ground swell will continue regardless of which candidate wins.

Nevertheless, uncertainty is still retarding the launching of large scale capital expenditures.

President Roosevelt's aboutface in his attitude towards the utility industry has inspired some newspaper publicity that is confidence that the new, unusually conciliatory, move really means anything beyond political strategy to mollify the east number of casualty holders who have become opposed to President Roosevelt's awaiting of private companies.

Nothing definite, nothing fundamental, has developed from the White House conference and subsequent conference between Tennessee Valley Authority and utility executives. The prospect is that the agreement between Tennessee Valley Authority and companies in its territory which purchase its electrical output will be extended for several months.

But no modus vivendi for any permanent working arrangement between surrounding states has been evolved. No litigation has been called off.

How business leaders analyze general political conditions and political prospects may be summarized thus:

President Roosevelt is backing away, or at least going through the motions of backing away from outright inflation.

Practically every important poll pictures impressive Landon strength. Yet, during the past week or so a very widespread in the business and financial world.

Employees, however, now feel reasonably sure that the next Congress will be more friendly than the aloof and, should Mr. Roosevelt be re-elected distinctly less subservient.

One basic concern is over what might happen to the makeup of the Supreme Court under four more years of Roosevelt. Wherever responsible citizens gather, this matter is apprehensively discussed.

Turning to economic actualities, favorable news easily outweighs unfavorable.

Re-employment proceeds painfully slow, but unmistakably.

Industry is producing so-called durable and semi-durable products are on the upgrade. Steel manufacturers are better situated financially than at any time since 1930. Most motor manufacturers, following large 1936 sales, are hopeful that 1937 will come near breaking even the best boom time records.

Rails are ailing. Railroads are less dormant than it was, but it is still far from boom proportions.

Railroads are doing more traffic than at any time since the early stages of the violent downswing of 1930-32. Power output also thanks partly to the multiplying new uses for electric current, continues to break records.

Farm income is increasing, as many homeowners are learning to their distress.

Retail trade holds substantially above a year ago in almost every phase of business, although drouth effects are now appearing.

Dividend disbursements so far this year are estimated to have been the first billion dollars of last year by half a billion dollars. This comparison promises to become still more favorable as time goes, largely to the pressure exercised by the shortsighted new law providing penalty taxes on undistributed profits to strengthen their financial reserve.

Wall Street is now busy "picking probable winners," meaning the shares of corporations likely to show substantial disbursements before the year ends.

The financial world looks for no violent eruptions in international exchange following the concerted action of France, America and Britain.

EXCHANGE FACTOR
Dollar More Valuable

By BROADAN WALL
Universal Service

New York, Oct. 5 (US)—Let the stock market only one week to cast aside the latest European money devaluations as "unimportant." Indeed, the market's action late in the week indicated these money changes are taken as highly constructive developments.

That is, they are being so construed by most people who pay any attention to the foreign news at all. Most people who are holding or buying stocks believe the market is supported wholly and solely by domestic developments.

Their faith is firm that the forward surge in our business cannot be checked by the election, by suspension of government spending or by any other factor, save the factors which instituted the bull market, therefore, are still here.

That is all but true, which few people apparently pat recognized. The dollar has risen in value.

Its increased purchasing in the French franc and allied currencies has cancelled some part of the cheapening which took place when we devalued.

Most people today think the dollar is still worth 59 cents in old pre-1933 international value. The fact is that in terms of the French "gold block" currencies, the dollar has appreciated substantially in value. Whether its present value is 59 cents or its full former value, or higher, will be determined by the final resting basis for the franc and the other devalued currencies.

At any rate, the dollar is more valuable internationally than it was a fortnight back. From England sterling, the dollar has gone up. The pound was quoted around $5.06 only two weeks ago. Saturday it was down to $4.93. Daily, despite official disclaimers, will also devalue against Germany and other nations which proclaim their steadfastness to the gold valuation now prevailing, will also feel the pinch of other countries devaluing.

Thus we have a situation where almost the whole world's money is cheapened in regard to the dollar. Naturally, it becomes that much cheaper also to buy the products of countries where the money is lower than the dollar.

Cheapening of foreign currencies, which is of helping our domestic revival, might cause an intensification of depression for some industries. For this reason, investors and speculators ought to take a second look especially at stocks of companies which may do any degree upon foreign business.

Good Gain IS FORECAST For N. E.

By HUGH E. BRADSHAW

The New England business prospect is still laden with cheer. The latest welcome item comes in the form of estimated consumer income gains for the next six-month period.

At hand today is the Brookmire Income Map forecasting a 15 per cent gain in incomes for the next six months over the same period a year ago, all of which means that much more revival in the New England area.

The same service hereafter with some misgivings on the horizon behind the steady entrenchment in new recovery territory. Manufacturing payrolls have been registered expanding and are again reaching the highest point since 1930. Farmers' incomes are persistently gaining and the latest figures show that, while July showed an increase of 24 per cent over the like month a year earlier, . . .

Now for some of the figures in detail. Brookmire has broken down the gain and the good 15 per cent is spreading in Vermont and New Hampshire, Maine and Connecticut 19 per cent and Massachusetts 20 per cent. Rhode Island 15 per cent and Connecticut 19 per cent. And it all adds up to a good fall and winter in New England.

Not-book: For the country as a whole the Brookmire figures call for a 20 per cent gain over a year ago in the next six months. While an estimated gain of 50 per cent in consumer income in the same period over the average of the past three years is expected . . . White Sewing Machine reports a gain around $2.52 per share of profferred this year . . . August sales showed big increases and we see the trend is continuing . . . General Theaters Equipment bulls are talking $6 per share earnings for the full year . . . Mangel Stores sales are not showing the expansion of some other units but profits margins are said to be better than in 1935.

The stock market, after its frenzy in wrapping up and selling long term securities, is now the talk of a reaction in hand to some circles. We will not monkey with any such theory but we do see the possibility of slight technical corrections. But we see no reason for any protracted period, as there seems to be ample room for all pending issues to be absorbed. Even some arise a 2 or 3 point surge. The market has said it is headed higher and we do not propose to argue for the sake of trying to make money this is a waste of time and profit accordingly.

Tickey Ticks: If there is anything traders should be looking for at present it is the higher levels to be seen before the week is out . . . And the clues to group rotation intended to keep the list swinging along without interruption . . . Just remember that the big triangular formations we wrote of and described last week have broken upside . . . And by prescribed fashion according to the best technical formulas . . . Heavy volume accompanied the upside burst and Saturday a jump opening took place and was maintained throughout the session . . . Stay bullish is our advice.

Al Smith Keeps Faith With America

ALFRED E. SMITH has made A PATRIOT'S CHOICE.

He has chosen a course THAT ASSURES THE SECURITY OF AMERICA, in preference to a political course that presents peril to his country.

A former Presidential candidate of the Democratic Party, he has endorsed the Republican candidate for the Presidency, Alfred M. Landon.

He has done this because he believes Mr. Landon:

"Can be relied upon to cherish and preserve the great principles upon which the country was founded, and without which it cannot endure."

MR. SMITH DOES NOT BELIEVE THE AMERICAN PEOPLE CAN PLACE THIS SAME RELIANCE IN FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

He takes this stand with full knowledge of the responsibility it puts upon him.

It means repudiation of the Presidential nominee of the party that once accorded him the same high honor.

It means a severance of partisan ties that have bound him closely to associates he still honors and to principles to which he still adheres.

He has done this for the ONLY REASON that could make an HONEST man do it—

BECAUSE THE WELFARE OF HIS COUNTRY LEAVES HIM NO OTHER COURSE.

THAT Mr. Smith regrets the necessity of the choice, no man who knows him can doubt.

That he makes this PATRIOTIC CHOICE courageously and without hesitation, is understood by all Americans who have honored him for his stalwart principles of Americanism.

Mr. Smith has not acted in anger or with rancor.

He is not inspired by political motive, or by interests of concern to himself alone or to his career.

He believes the Democratic Party has fallen under the spell of national leadership IN WHICH THE NATION CANNOT HAVE CONFIDENCE.

He believes the Presidency must be denied to a man WHO HAS FAILED IN HIS TRUST.

He believes the future of America, continuing under these evil influences, would be fraught with dangers and uncertainties.

Believing these things, Mr. Smith is doing the only thing a man of his known integrity, of his unquestioned patriotic vision, could do.

He is pledging himself TO THE SAVING OF AMERICA from what he conceives to be the OBVIOUS MENACE of unsound leadership, of mistaken policies and of sinister doctrines THAT HAVE IMPREGNATED THE PRESENT NATIONAL ADMINISTRATION.

Al Smith would make this choice if he had to stand alone and face the wrath of multitudes.

He does not fear the censure of those he knows to be THE ENEMIES OF HIS COUNTRY.

Though he values friendship as among the highest of values, he will not follow a friend into the path of error.

Though he has served the Democratic Party with all the devotion of which he is capable, he will not follow that party in a course that endangers the security of his country.

* * *

AL SMITH has KEPT FAITH WITH AMERICA, refusing to bury his honor as a patriot in a partisan shroud when his conscience tells him:

"The remedy for all the ills we are suffering from today is in the election of Alfred M. Landon."

Every Eligible Voter Should Register

THE REGISTRATION of all eligible voters, always an essential preliminary to an election, becomes a major function of citizenship in this, a presidential election year.

Voters in Boston will be registered daily between the hours of 9 a. m. and 10 p. m. at the office of the Municipal Election Commission and between the hours of 6 p. m. and 10 p. m. at the various booths in the 22 wards of the city. The registration deadline is 10 p. m., October 14.

It is a simple thing to say, but a vitally important thing to remember, that the voter who does not register DOES NOT VOTE.

To play the part in this election which every citizen is not only ENTITLED to play but is REQUIRED to play as a matter of GOOD CITIZENSHIP, proper registration is a duty that must not be neglected.

In every election, many voters find themselves denied the right to franchise at the polls BY THEIR OWN NEGLIGENCE.

All intelligent Americans will want to cast their ballots in the November election. Issues of vital concern to all citizens are to be determined. BASIC PRINCIPLES OF GOVERNMENT ARE AT STAKE.

The very manner in which the lives of the people are to be lived in the years to come will be affected by the majority opinion expressed at the polls.

Not only is the pattern of the national government to be inscribed in the terms of the popular will, but the policies of the State will also be prescribed by the people.

THESE fateful decisions will affect every business, every home, every job, every life.

They must be RIGHT decisions.

To be right, they must be rendered by all the people and be guided by conscientious judgment of what is good for the State, good for the country and good for the people.

If some arbitrary authority should attempt to deprive the people of the right to vote, the protests would shake the country to its foundations.

But of what benefit is the right to vote to a citizen WHO FAILS TO EXERCISE THE RIGHT?

FRANCE'S troubles began from the day her electorate was beguiled into voting into power a radical Socialist party, with principles not far removed from Sovietism.

Her troubles multiplied from the day also that she concluded a treaty with the PLOTTER OF ALL WORLD-TROUBLE, COMMUNIST RUSSIA.

The flag of the Red Terror was raised even on her warships.

Millions went on stay-in-and-sit-down strikes, ALWAYS THE FORERUNNER OF SOVIETISM.

The French treasury will face a deficit of more than 3,000,000,000 francs before the end of this year.

Finance Minister Auriol frankly confesses there will be NO BALANCED BUDGET for 1937.

Now France has been compelled to devalue the franc 30 per cent.

These are the results of France's "New Deal"—A STEADY DEBACLE.

She is in the RED both politically and financially.

The lesson is very plain to our people, who are soon to go to the polls.

Let them remember that a LEFT SWING IS A RED SWING.

'Made in America'

On that plain, old-fashioned platform,
Unpretentious, but substantial
And devoid of fancy trimmings,
Uncle Sam may stand with safety.

Hastily and ill-planned structures
That are never half completed
From their showy plans and blueprints
Can no longer fool or tempt him.

New York Day by Day

By O. O. McIntyre

O. O. McIntyre

New York, Oct. 5—Diary: A letter from Rita Weiman telling of the happy literary colony on Cape Cod and especially that rare writing pair, Fulton Oursler and Grace Perkins. And a posy from Frederick Palmer which I cherish. Also Ralph Barton sketches from Colin Clements.

Anne Parrish, a capable young lady who has been my syndicate secretary for years, but whom I've never seen, took off for Hollywood today for another post, making the journey with Zoe Beckley in Zoe's gasoline buggy. So, listening to the jabber of French in the kitchen or as Park avenue has it, "servants' hall."

To dinner with Will and Jessie Hayes, back for a long stay at their home in Hidden Valley, California. And news of Betty Rogers and their ranch neighbors the Rothkekers and Winnie Sheehan and the lovely Jerritts. To bed early, reading the Oxford selections of English verse.

In Cincinnati, during the 90's, where bartenders were numerous, they were paid from $18 to $25 a week top. A sporty, high-flying crowd for such pay, too. The bar men today—they dislike the term bartender—fare far more sumptuously. They must be mixologists and know instantly every drink asked for.

Some in the wacky wahoos receive $60 a week and double that with tips. Leaving change for the barman is a part of the modern's rule.

Time, too, has changed the makeup of the bar man. Once he sported fierce mustaches, huge gatesajar collar, red tie centering a big Montana diamond and hair in a lion tamer's roach. He tried to look like John L. Sullivan or the reigning champion. The new type is a John Held, Jr., collegiate—many are frustrated college boys—with polite, smart talk. They would do all right in the movies.

Off duty they go to the shore, dance dee-vine-ly and are accomplished week-end guests. The railing has not the atmosphere it once had. The poor dears have to do something, you know!

Personal nomination for the baseball star most at home before the microphone: Carl Hubbell.

The most fashionable movie audience in the city both artistically and from a Social Register slant, is found at the Trans-Lux news reel on Madison avenue.

Fringeing the Gold Coast, it's the rendezvous of society "time killers." The gadabout Clara Bell Walshes having an hour before late dinner or the interlude splitting theater and after midnight affairs.

Between 8 and midnight the audience is composed mostly of those from apartment houses and mansions of Park avenue and the Sutton and Beekman Places. Always a sprinkling of such names as Vanderbilt, Astor, Goelet and Gould. The President's mother is an oft-time visitor.

There's a specious theory that the elegantly smeared restaurants are patronized chiefly by the top drawer set. They do not form so much of the patronage as the nouveaux rich.

Mrs. Helen Gould Shepherd often entertains guests in the chintzy tea rooms near her avenue home. Grand Duchess Marie goes in for the side street Parisy places. Cobina Wright likes the Armenian cafes on lower Lexington. Alma Claybergh now and then tosses a dinner at one of those down stairs spots in Chinatown. Peggy Hoyt takes luncheon guests to a little Dutch Cook Oven in Yorkville.

Mrs. Vincent Astor likes the rustic taverns with lamplight and red table cloths in the rural districts.

Bagatelles: Lynn Fontanne collects extra long cigarette holders . . . Bob Burns used to play third rate vaudeville for $25 a week and cakes . . . Michael Arlen is bringing over two plays, one about high jinks on the Riviera . . . Reverend Smith, famed London hotel man, never appears in any of his dining rooms or bars . . . Ashton Stevens, Chicago critic, knows more players personally than any other reviewer . . . Julian Green, who writes those depressing novels of French life, is that moody in real life . . . One of Tad's gleams . . . Ernest Hemingway has mucked his Florida hollyhoe and now raves about Montana . . . John Dos Passos' favorite American spot is Provincetown. The only place where he can work.

Most of the month in the first cinema heavens of Clifford Odets' those who expected to see some of the leftist jousts expressed in his plays found Hollywood had taken care of all that. So much so that one of the finishes Mr. Odets inquired, "Odets, where is thy sting?"

Isn't It So?

The Palestine Crisis

The Human Side of the News

By Edwin C. Hill

THE GLOBE TROTTER OF HEARST METROTONE NEWS

Edwin C. Hill

The news value in the Emperor Hadrian that an army of 200,000 Israelites, commanded by a great leader, Bar Kochba, was in rebellion and sweeping through Palestine to regain its freedom from the vassalage of Imperial Rome.

Whereupon Hadrian summoned his general, Julius Severus, and commanded him to take the flower of the Roman Legions to Palestine, to put down the rebellion, to make Jerusalem a pagan city and to exile the Jews from it for all time.

CENTURIES OF STRIFE

Severus conquered with the help of some treachery. He reoccupied Jerusalem in the name of Hadrian. The city's name became Aelia Capitolina. A temple of Jupiter was built on the site of the Jewish temple, and the edict went forth that any Jew appearing within sight of the city would be put to death. This was the year 135 A. D.

Five hundred years later—636 A. D.—the Moslems came, as the Assyrians, Babylonians, Egyptians, Greeks and Romans had come before them. The followers of the Prophet, Arab and Turk, ruled the land for 1300 years. And now, in the year 1936 A. D., the word comes to His Britannic Majesty that the people of Mohammed are in rebellion, refusing to live in peace with the Jews who are rapidly building a homeland in Palestine under the protection of Great Britain.

Whereupon Edward VIII directs his general, J. C. Dill, to go off in Palestine with an army corps of British regulars and see to it that the Jews are safeguarded under the terms of the famous Balfour declaration.

England gave this pledge as a reward for the support of the Jews to the Allied cause in the World War. She was particularly indebted to Chaim Weizmann, president of the World Zionist Congress, for it was Weizmann's work as director of the British Admiralty's laboratories, in creating explosives that went far to make victory possible.

Since the World War, 200,000 Jews have gone to Palestine, hundreds of millions of dollars of Jewish money has poured into the country. As a result of their industry and their money, Palestine has been reclaimed from the desert and started along the path to become once more "the land of milk and honey" which the spies reported to Moses. Their coming and their money was welcomed by the Arabs, the Emir Feisal acting at Versailles.

"Our delegates here are fully acquainted with the proposals submitted to the peace conference by the Zionists and regard them as moderate and proper. We will do all we can to help them. We wish the Jews a hearty welcome home."

PEACE MORE CERTAIN

The building boom and the agricultural enterprises of the Jews brought thousands of Arabs into Palestine for work and a share in the prosperity. Had it not been for agitators and fanatics the two peoples would have gotten along with little or no friction.

The latest word from Palestine is a hopeful one; that the Arab leaders will help to work out a solution. This is something to be desired. Palestine is one place suffused in peace. It has had its fill of strife over thousands of years.

BROKE OWN HEARTS

Then, with a mighty yell, we fell upon them—crushing through the sidewalk throng of busy persons—elbowing their arms to ribs, their bodies to dummy shreds.

Yet ghastly as war was to face, an immeasurably greater test awaited them. PEACE, shabby, monotonous peace, once point of pomp glamour or gaiety . . . there was the thing which broke thousands who had managed, somehow, to survive.

No Yankee cannon or bayonet was made which could crush their southern pride and courage. But that which the Yankee could not do to them, they did to themselves. They the unflickable, were licked by their own memories. Pitifully, pitifully, Will Benteen summed it up as he stood above the grave of Gerald O'Hara, who had never known defeat until his own heart broke. Staring at the gaunt faces about him—reading on each face the story of the same secret triumph or defeat—he said:

"There wasn't nothin' that come to him from the outside that could lick him . . . But . . . he could be licked from the inside."

"It ain't always losin' some one you love that does it, like it done Mr. O'Hara. Everybody's mainspring is different.

"And I want to say this—folks whose mainsprings are busted are heller dead. There ain't no place for them in the world these days."

NO REAL COURAGE

People who would mainsprings—broken spirits who refuse to face ground or future but who cling to the past—in numbers of the past—they're as common as in 1866 as they were in 1865. But the way to meet defeat like that—encouraging in the face of downright peril, listless when the need is not there.

We're that way because we never possessed REAL bravery. We're that way because many a Southerner through the war, which carries us, today, through and across peril, into struggle . . . IT'S EXCITEMENT. We're "motivated" by the turmoil around us. For while the turmoil has ceased and we must depend on ourselves, we show our actual cowardice by refraining into dreams.

Memories are fine stuff for romantic fiction, but deadly kidaways for the human spirit.
